MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and dated the 24th day of August, A. D, 1882, by Alfred Doutre and Melvina Doutre, his wife, to Solon Marks, and duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds for Polk county, Minnesota, on the 25th day of August, A. D. 1882, at 1:25 o'clock p. m., in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 581, 582, and 583, which said mortgage was thereafter on the eighteenth day of May, A. D., 1900, by an instrument in writing, duly assigned by said Solon Marks, to William T. Souder, and John Trevor, both of Hennepin county, Minnesota, which said assignment was duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds for Red Lake county, Minnesota, on the Fourth day of June, A. D., 1900, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "P" of mortgages, on page 479, which said mortgage conveyed and mortgaged the following described premises in Polk county, now Red Lake county, Minnesota, to-wit:

The South one half (S ½) of the south east quarter (S E¼) and the south east quarter (S E ¼) of the southwest quarter (S W ¼) of section four (4) and the Southwest quarter (S W ¼) of the Southwest quarter (S W ¼) of section three (3) in township one hundred fifty-one (151) north of range forty two (42) west, containing one hundred sixty (160) acres more or less, according to the government survey thereof.

That there is due upon the note and mortgage at this date five hundred and six and 60-100 ($506.60) and which said note bears even date with said mortgage, and became due and payable on the 24th day of August, 1887, together with attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage amounting to twenty-five ($25.00) dollars.

There is also due upon said mortgage the sum of seventy and 39-100 dollars ($70.39) which said assignees of said mortgage have paid as delinquent taxes and interest duly levied upon said premises for the years 1896 to 1899 both inclusive, which sum has become a lien upon said land, according to the statute of Minnesota in such case made and provided, making the total amount due upon said mortgage to date including principal, interest, attorney's fees and taxes, six hundred and one and 99-100 ($601.99) dollars, no proceedings at law have been instituted to recover any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and pursuant to the statutes, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said mortgaged premises, at public auction, at the front door of the court house in the village of Red Lake Falls, on Saturday, the 18th day of August, A. D. 1900, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, to satisfy the sum herein claimed to be due on said mortgage, together with all costs and charges to foreclose.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE

Hoverstad, of the Crookston State Experimentel farm, assisted by three able speakers, and should he attended by every progressive farmer of the conaty who wishes to forge aheed in the science of ogriculture. Our farmers have much to learn, and should avail themselves of this opportunity. Every speaker will be an expert in his line, who will talk not only from observation hut from actual experience. Many who attended the Institute held here two years ago, knowing the benefits to be derived; will be eager to come to this Institute, and others who did not attend two years ago, should not repeat their mistake. There will be a morning and an afternoon session.

The following letter from Prof. Hoveretad will give an ideo of the subjects to be discussed, and by reference. It will be seen that thers will he distributed free to those in attendance, the Institute Annual, a book worth its weight in gold to any farmer or stockman, and which could not ordinarily be bought for several dollars. The letter follows:

Phil. A. Kaufer.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.,

Dear Sir:—

A Farmers' Institute will be held, as per your request, July 21. This being Saturdey, I think it will be wise to have the institute on that date. We shall take a team and drive so we can be there at 10 or 10:30 in the morning. We shall have a morning and an afternoon session. There will probably be four speakers, so the time can be well occupied.

The main work will he in relation to live stock with special attention to delrying, in order that as much benefit as possible can be given to the successful operation of the creamery etarted there. The growing of grains, gresses and forage crops will also be given due consideration. We shall largely he guided by what the farmers are mostly in need of. I think we shall hove books aloog for free distribution to those in sttendance.

Ledies are as welcome as men. In the lectures oo carc of milk etc. they are as interested as anyone.

Yours truly,
T. A. Hoverstad.

Benjamin Dolbec Speaks for the Louisville Creamery.

Mr. Editor:

In an article published in The Gazette, you mention the fact and state positively that the Red Leke Falls creamery is the first creamery organized in the county. Now, Mr. Editor, you know as well as I do that such is not the case, we Louisville people claiming the honor of having the first creamery organized and in full operation in the county of Red Lake, and the records of the Food and Dairy Commissioner will prove it to you. When Mr. Glover was here to inspect our creamery the Red Lake Falls Creamery was not in operation yet, and did not get in operation for some time.

Now Mr. Editor, kindly publish this ehort article in your paper for the benefit of those interested at the same time acknowledging your mistake.

Yours for justice,
Benj. Dolbec.

The above communication was received by The Gazette Tuesday. In reply, will say that, in commenting upon the starting of our creamery a couple of weeks ago, we did say it was the first creamery organized in the county. We thought then and we do now, that the Red Lake Falls Creamery Association was the first one to organize. It is true, however, as Mr. Dolbec says, thet the Louisville Creamery was the firet in operation, and was making butter some time before the Red Lake Faile plant was started. The Gazette has no desire to detract in any way from the creditable and successfull efforts of the Louisville farmers, who, without much ado, and without aid from any eource, relying entirely upon their own efforts. succeeded in establishing a creamery thot hes met the approbation of the state authorities. With the vim, energy and push displayed in getting this creamery under woy, there can be no doubt that the institution will he a paying one, and their good example will serve as a stimulus for other sections of the county, until we will force prosperity our way through the medium of the cow properly utilized. All credit to the Louisville promoters.

POPULIST CO. CONVENTION.

Will be Held in This City the First of August to Nominate a County Ticket.

The Populist committee met Tuesday afternoon, to decide upon the date and location of the next county convention. There were present the chairman, H. E. Ives, and Peter Hall, of St. Hiloire; the secretary. J. W. Swanstrom, and K. M. Honsen of Thief River Falls, Samuel Gibeau, Dr. I. Lemeux and Frank Jeffers, of this city, and A. D. Baril, of Louisville. Motions were made to have the convention held at Red Lake Falls and St. Hilaire. There were eight votes on the motion and four were for Red Lake Falls and 4 for St. Hilaire. Four ballots were taken, and each time the vote was a tie. The votes stood, for Red Lake Falls—Gibeau, Lemeiux, Jeffers, Baril. For St. Hilaire, Ives, Hall, Haneen, Swanstrom. After the 4th ballot, Hanson changed his vote from St. Hilaire to Red Lake Falls. This gave Red Lake Falle the majority of two, and located the convention here. The apportionment was fixed at one delegate for every 50 votes or major fraction thereof cast for P. M. Ringdal in the last election.

WORTHY OF ADOPTION.

Ernest Buse is about to make a plea to the city council for an annual appropriation of $100 to be used in advertising the resources and needs of Red Lake Falls in the way of manfacturing plants, in the metropolitan and trade journals of the country. Mr. Buse is a firm believer in the theory that capital could be induced to invest here in manufacturing industries, utilizing our vast water power, if we would but get our case before them by advertising in proper publications. The Gazette concurs with Mr. Buse.

It was through his efforts, seconded by the writer and others that the appropriation was secured from the Commercial Club to advertise our saw mill site, which resulted in the location of our saw mill. It is reasonable to suppose that the same results might be achieved in different lines by following the same methods. $100 annually would be a very small appropriation, and the council should not hesitate to make it. Our resources are undoubted. but the trouble is, the world is ignorant of them. Let us advertise.

AAKER'S POSITION.

No doubt congressman Eddy smiles when he reads the following statement from Mayor Aaker, of Moorhead, as to his position in the 7th district congressional contest:

To the many friends in this city, county and district, who have exerted themselves in my behalf, I desire to extend my sincere thanks. I regret that they so far over estimated the strength of the anti-saloon sentiment in their party as to look for and expect my nomination.

My position in the coming campaign is perfectly plain. I repeatedly declared to individuals and delegations at Fergus Falls that I could not promise to support the nominee of the convention, even though I promised to support the Fusion ticket if nominated. The vote of the convention clearly shows that the majority thought that they could very well get along without the prohibition vote, and they will now have an opportunity of demonstrating the fact. Experience, though is a dear teacher, and it is so to be regretted that the minority, who supported me in the convention, must share in the probable dissappointment of the majority.

As far as I am personally concerned I am perfectly satisfied. I was, of course, dissappointed at being beaten, but I could really expect nothing else. The result leaves the prohibition cause several degress ahead and it will materially hasten the time when the anti-saloon sentiment will stand together in the 7th congressional district. Respectfully,

H. H. Aaker.

A POPULAR JUDGE.

Hon. J. T. Knight, judge of probate for Red Lake County, is one of the most popular and efficient probate judges in the State. Indeed, so well do the people appreciate him, that there is considerable talk of making him the nominee not only of the Democratic and Populist parties, but of giving him the Republican nomination as well—in fact, raising his office out of the mire of politics, and tendering it to a man who has so ably administered its affairs the past term. Judge Knight would be well worthy of this exceptional honor. He is justly termed the Father of Red Lake County, and it is conceded but for him there would be no Red Lake County to-day. In this way he is deserving of recognition. The Gazette knows that counties as well as republics can be ungrateful, but we say that Hon. J. T. Knight ought to be given his pick of the best office in the county, if he desired that, as this would be only recognition of what he really deserves, but he has made an able judge of probate, and the people want to keep him there. Should the three parties unite on him, it would be a fitting compliment.

Two years ago Judge Knight received the nomination on the Populist ticket and was elected by a splendid majority. The Populist party may be proud of the record he has made, can not find a better man for the office, and he should be given the nomination this year unanimously.

As to the other parties, their conventions come later, they ought to place the name of J. T. Knight on their tickets for judge of probate.

The people of Red Lake county owe this much to the Father of the County.

People's Party County Convention.

A people's party county convention for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesota will be held at the court house in the city of Red Lake Falls in said county on Wednesday the 1st day of August, 1900, for the purpose of placing in nomination the candidates of said party for the following county officers: Auditor, Treasurer, Superintendent of Schools, Register of Deeds, Clerk of Court, Sheriff, County Attorney, Judge of Probate, Surveyor, Coroner, commissioner for the 2nd district, and commissioner for the 4th district of the said Red Lake county.

Also for the purpose of electing the necessary number of delegates to attend the legislative convention for the 61st legislative district, to be held later.

The basis of representation as determined by the county central committee shall be one delegate at large for each voting precinct, and one delegate for every fifty votes, or major part thereof, cast for P. M. Ringdal for member of congress at the general election in 1898.

In conformity with the foregoing apportionment the voting precincts of Red Lake county will be entitled to delegates in said convention as follows:

OUR HIGH SCHOOL.

IT IS BEING JEOPARDIZED BY UNWARRANTED ATTACKS.

INSPECTOR OF STATE GRADED SCHOOLS MAKES EVERYTHING CLEAR.

Fred Krueger some time ago received a letter from A. W. Rankin, Inspector of State Graded Schools, which is a strong argument in favor of the retention and indorsement of Prof. McNally. Among other things he says:

"What you need there is a little time for the good seed sown in the last two years to sprout. You ought not to be digging it up all the while to see how it is getting along.

"In my opinion the schools are very fairly graded, as for as could be done with the pupils on hand.

"If there is a fight on, and if we have reason to suppose the difficulty is not so much in the superintendent as in the educational sentiment of the town, and if we think that the dismissal of the present superintendent is not necessary, and that the next one would have a "rocky" time of it, it would make us think hard before deciding to risk the school.

In my opinion the schools of Red Lake Falls would do well to retain Mr. McNally.

Mr. Aiton and I have decided to recommend the Red Lake Falls school for the High School grant, unless you people up there make it impossible for us to do it. If Mr. McNally is not retained, we would have to consider the matter all over again.

"This is all written with the best of disposition, and in closing I want to assure you, and through you the School Board, that Mr. Aiton and I do not want to pose as dictators in any sense whatever, we simply want to do our duty as we understand it to the State High School Board, acting under the law providing for our services.

Yours truly,
A. W. RANKIN.

From the above it is plain, that

1.—Supt. McNally is indorsed.

2.—That if he remains, we are sure of a good High School and $800 a year state aid.

3.—If a new man is put in, we are sure of nothing, except delay, while there is a possibility of failure and of the ruin of our schools.

The removal of a superintendent who is making a success of the school for purely personal reasons, is not wise, and harmony is disturbed by such procedure.

Holders of the special train tickets desiring to remain in Winnipeg can have limit of their tickets extended to July 29th by applying to the agent at Winnipeg and paying the difference between the rate paid and rate of one fare for the round trip. THE SCHOOL ELECTION.

There is a very strong sentiment against changing Supt. McNally for a new and untried man. Everything has been running smoothly, and there is no disposition on the part of our people to stir up a row, and disturb existing conditions, which are highly satisfactory. Prof. McNally was re-engaged a couple of months ago, by the board of education without one dissenting vote, and inasmuch as he is to be at the head of our schools for another year, it would be folly to elect men whose purpose it would be to illegally cancel his contract, and involve the district in litigation and destroy the comparative harmony now existing. Even the Courier tacitly admits that Supt. McNally is a competent man. Its only given reason for a change is the plea of harmony. The dismissal of Supt. McNally will destroy harmony, and engender a row. He came here three years ago, and our schools have been steadily marching on. For the first year we were placed on the state graded list, receiving $200 state aid; the second year, we earned $400 and the third year, $800 High School state aid. The last $1200 has not been received, and there is no doubt that it never will come from the state, if at the coming election we put in men antagonistic to Supt. McNally, thus turning our backs upon the suggestions of the state authorities. This is very evident from the Rankin letter published in another column. The schools are forging ahead; a High School course is established, and next year will see the full four years' course in operation, with some 46 pupils doing High School work and there will be the first graduating class. Our schools are now recognized by the state authorities, and Inspector of State Graded Schools Rankin informed The Gazette personally that "under Prof. McNally's management he expected to see one of the best and strongest High Schools built up here." This is a strong indorsement, but we need not look to this source alone for our judgment. We can see for ourselves and we know what has been accomplished in the past three years. We know, too, that what has been accomplished has not been an easy task. Supt. McNally has toiled ceaselessly, not only during school hours, but before and after, to raise our educational institution where it is today; he has taken a profound interest in the ambitious youth of the city, and mornings, evenings and Saturdays, has devoted much time to teaching special branches. Once a poor boy himself, raising himself by unaided efforts to his high scholarly plane, (holding a life state certificate, one of only about 40 in the state) he is sympathetic and ever anxious to lend a helping hand to struggling and aspiring youth; a gentleman in every sense of the word, friendly and courteous to all alike, he is a fitting model for our boys.

In fact, Supt. McNally's character is such that a true parent could not wish a better example for a son. Not a word can truthfully be said against his ability, his faithfulness, his integrity, nor the success of our schools under his supervision. Several months ago the board of education, without a dissenting vote (two blanks) re-engaged Supt. McNally for another year. This action of the board met with the approval of the people with but few exceptions, and on all sides came expressions of praise and satisfaction, because the fact that our schools were making rapid progress and would continue to do so, was fully appreciated by our citizens. In fact the schools could not have made faster progress. No one claims or thinks for one moment that Supt. McNally is the only man who can "run our schools." There are doubtless thousands of others, who would do equally as well, but getting a new Superintendent is always an experiment, for there are a hundred poor ones to one good one. Even if a teacher or superintendent has been a success elsewhere, each locality and each school has its peculiarities that might make a success for one man, a failure for another. In the face of all these facts, what justification have we for change? There has been some talk about interfering with the local board. If Red Lake Falls wants to have a High School, and receive State money, our Board will have to accept state supervision (which has been erroneously termed "dictation" by some) and Supt. McNally has merely been carrying out the wishes and demands of the State authorities. If Red Lake Falls does not want a High School, then our Board will be free to do about as it pleases. It must be generally understood, however, that the talk about dictation comes solely from the Superintendent acting under the supervision of the State authorities.

As it is, if the administration is indorsed, everything will continue to run smoothly, our High School will continue to grow and prosper, we will receive our $1200 state aid, and $800 a year thereafter. In the face of these facts, it will be nothing short of disastrous to disturb the existing conditions.

The Gazette wants to see our city and our schools forge ahead, and disaster to the schools means detriment to the city. We know our High School is a success, and that to turn things up side down at this stage would be the utmost folly.

Adam Schmitz and A. J. Lachapelle will be candidates for members of the Board, and we urge the voters to elect them. They stand for the administration. Their election means the State appropriation, sure, the establishment of our High School on a firm basis, and harmony.

The only big shoW coming. The big success of 1900.

Dan Oerlnch is circulating a subscription list in aid of the German Lutheran Congregation, of Polk Centre, which has been liberally subscribed to. Rev. Kern, for four years pastor of the Thief River Falls congregation will have charge of the Polk Centre flock, which though small, comprising only eighteen families, has been able the past several years to support a minister. Their new church edifice, just completed, would be a credit to a much larger congregation.

Our base ball nine and our citizens who attended the game at Thief River Falls Sunday were very much agrieved at the treatment accorded our nine. The umpires were altogether one sided and appeared bound to give the game to Thief River Falls at any cost, and in fact the treatment before, after, and during the game was said to have been extremly rank. This is not the first experience of the kind there, and our boys are disgusted. The fact that they lost the game cuts no ice, they are used to that, but they know when they are used right, and when they are not. This was distinctly a negative case.

A fire this morning destroyed the Bischoff building in which was located Brown's tailor shop, and partly destroyed the Fruend building adjoining. Brown loses everything, without insurance. Fruend sustains a heavy loss on the bicycle repairs, which were not insured. The two buildings were insured, but there is a heavy loss on each. Mr. Brown, P. E. Foldoe and A. Horovitz were severely burned about the face and hands, while trying to enter the tailor shop. Mr. and Mrs. Ford, who had moved into the residence flat of the Freund building yesterday saved all their household effects.

Editor of Gazette:
Dear Sir:—

I have been informed that some people are striving to make political capital out of the cry "We don't propose to have our schools run by the preachers." Will you kindly say to the readers of your most excellent paper that I have come to Red Lake Falls to PREACH THE GOSPEL and not to DABBLE IN POLITICS. This has been the rule of my life, and I see no reason for changing it. While I do not expect to be a patron of the high school during next year, I am satisfied with the work of my children in the lower grades the past term.

Mr. Stormberg came here a short time since to visit his daughter and had been enjoying fairly good health all the time during his visit. On Friday he in company with Mr. Hogstrom made a visit to St. Hilaire, returning home in the afternoon, after having been home for a short time he complained of pains in his heart which continued till about 12 o'clock at night, when it ceased. After that he enjoyed a couple of hours rest when the pain again commenced and continued till about 5 o'clock in the morning when death occurred. The remains were embalmed and shipped to the southern part of the state for interment.

WAS A SUCCESS

MANY FARMERS LISTEN TO INSTRUCTIVE AND INTERESTING LECTURES.

PROFS. HOVERSTAD AND GLOVER, AND COL. WILKINSON THE SPEAKERS.

The Red Lake County Farmers' Institute held in this city Saturday was well attended by representive farmers from all parts of the county. Supt. T. A. Hoverstad, of the Crookston Experimental Farm, was the first speaker, when the session was called to order at 10:30 A. M., and he gave those in attendance fulsome praise for their energy and enterprise in leaving the haying and other pressing farm work to attend, saying that this showed their intelligence and earnestness. It was not possible to set the session for any other time or he would have done so. He was so well pleased with the good attendance under the circumstances, that he promised to hold a two days' session next winter when the farm work would permit of a two days' lay off, and he expected at that time to have one of the largest and most successful institutes ever held. The other speakers were Col. R. A. Wilkinson and A. J. Glover, state Dairy Inspector. Prof. Hoverstad spoke on "grasses and Clovers," at the morning session. In the afternoon A. J. Glover addressed the Institute on "Types of Cattle" and Col. Wilkinson spoke on "Economic Beef Production." The farmers in attendence were grateful to Col. Wilkinson, as he had come from St. Paul especially to be present at the Institute. One more lecture was on the program, but the heavy rain coming about this time prevented further work, as the building in which the session was being held is not completed and has a poor roof. Our creamery was inspected, and the gentlemen were more than pleased with the high grade machinery and the plant as a whole.

Simons--Rodgers.

The marriage of Mr. Lumen C. Simons to Miss Agnes Rodgers was solemnized at the Presbyterian church Wednesday morning at 7 o'clock, the Rev. S. J. S. Moora, of this city, officiating, assisted by the Rev. F. L. Fraser, of Luverne, the latter pronouncing the words that made the couple man and wife.

At a quarter to seven the groom, attended by his best man, Malcom Wyar, entered the church, taking up his posi to the right. Promptly at seven the bride, leaning upon the arm of her father, and preceded by the bridesmaid, her sister, Miss Marjorie Rodgers, entered, carrying a bouquet of white Bride roses. Mrs. E. F. Marshall, presiding at the organ, softly played the Lohengren wedding march. The bridal party met at the foot of the chancel rail before the officiating clergyman. After the ceremony the happy couple, accompanied by the bridesmaid and groomsman and the bride's parents, drove to Dugdale, where they took the Great Northern for Duluth and the East, where they will visit the principal points of interest before their return.

The contracting parties are among our prominant and influential people, the groom having resided here for the past six years, during which time he has become identified with some of our leading business institutions; he is president of the Merchants State Bank, and secretary and manager of the Red Lake Falls Milling Company, in which corporation he is a large stock holder. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Rodgers, among our foremost families; she has grown from childhood to woman's estate in our midst.

Mr. and Mrs. Simons will go to housekeeping, upon their return, in the Kiepper cottage on Broadway, and will be at home after November 15th.

The Gazette extends congratulations and trusts that their journey along the pathway of life may be a smooth and happy one.

Teachers' Examination.

Fall examination for the teachers of Red Lake county will be held at the high school building in the city of Red Lake Falls, Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 6th and 7th. This will be the only examination in the county this fall and those expecting to take the examination will be present at 8 o'clock on the first day.

THE SCHOOL ELECTON.

Thos. Crompe and Henry Hennemuth Elected Members of the Board.

The most peculiar election ever held in this city has gone into history. A total of 612 votes were cast. Crompe received 369, Hennemuth 365, Lachapelle, 243, Schmitz, 240. This is the largest vote ever recorded here, and yet it decided nothing. A contest in which the candidates did not expect and did not receive the full support of their personal friends, and a contest into which so many conflicting elements entered as to leave families divided in opinion, and even finding many cases of husband and wife voting different tickets; a contest wherein the real issue, the endorsement or rebuke of the adminstrution was entirely lost sight of and played only a minor part; a contest wherein the candidates were all good men and true, among the best of citizens, and yet, where falsehood, detraction and calumny against the Supt. was the leading weapon of many of the workers; a contest which leaves truth and justice unvanquished, and yet not vindicated, and again a contest which has proven that when it is necessary bitter enemies can unite on one vindictive object and work hand in hand. And yet, out of the turmoil, the candidates elected stand before the people today with unsullied hands. If there was any dirt, they took no part in throwing it, they went into the contest not because of their wishes but in spite of them, and they have today the confidence of the people to such an extent that all feel the destiny of the schools perfectly safe in their hands, and that whatever they do in an official capacity will be done in the best interests of the schools.

No Famine in India.

We are told that there is a famine in India and that millions of people are starving. It is too true that they are starving, but it is not true that it is because of a shortage of crops. I have before me the official statistics of the wheat crop of India ever since British rule commenced. Last year the crop was the largest but one for many years. Last year over 35 million bushels were exported and this year, so far, over 16 million bushels have been sent out of the country! And the people are starving!! What wonder if the owners of the crops (not the man who produce it) send out the products and leave the people without anything to eat? And then appeal to the world to send in food to keep the wage-slaves that produced an abundance!! Are we not now exporting bread and other wealth that are needed at home? If the wages of the people are not enough they can not pay the prices demanded. That is all the matter with India. If the people had the money they could buy bread. What have the people of India to show for the billions of wealth their labor has produced and which has been exported? Nothing but their aches, pains and starvation. A writer stated that famines are profitable to the British Capitalists who rule the country. When the food is plentiful the English have to pay nine cents a day for laborers to build railroads and when it is scarce they pay only two cents! And they want to "make money" just as you do, readers, and likely you would take the same advantage of your fellows. If the land and machinery in India were in public hands, were controlled by the people, they would be living in luxury, but whenever man gains dominion over man and can keep him in ignorance you will always find conditions appearing as you see it in India today. India has produced enough food to keep her people in plenty. The private ownership of property gives it into the possesion of a few and that is all the trouble. It will do no good to feed such ignorant slaves who prefer to starve to death rather than strike a blow for their rights.—Appeal to Reason.

Fables of the Rail--4.

One night an editor was riding in the day coach for obvious reasons, and he was trying to write a leader for the next issue of his paper. The light was thin and the editor strained his eyes so badly that he had to turn over his plant to the lamp doctor and quit knocking for a living. But he was able thereafter to see his finish.

Moral—This would not have happened if he had ridden on a North Western Line train, because they are the most brilliantly illuminated trains in the world.

NEW PROJECT.

Northern Pacific People File Articles of Incorporation for a New Railroad Company.

Articles of Incorporation of a new company, which is to construct a road to Bemidji, on the line of Great Northern railway in Beltrami county, northeast to a point on the international boundry at Rainy Lake have been filed with the secretary of state. The new railway will measure from a continuation of the Brainerd & Northern Minnesota, which is under Northern Pacific control.

Bemidji is the northern terminus of this line, and the road will form a new route under Northern Pacific control from the cities to the international boundary. The incorporation of the line under Northern Pacific control is said to have a bearing upon Canadian activity looking towards a new East and West line north of the boundary, to tap the Rainy Lake mining region and the agricultural section southeast of Winnipeg in Manitoba. The company is now buying right-a-way for the new line and several miles will be built this fall.

The Baking Powder Law.

The supreme court of Minnesota has decided that the baking powder law of the state is constitutional. This settles controversy which interests all grocers in Minnesota, to say nothing of consumers

The main requirement of the baking powder law is that each can must be plainly marked on the outside so as to show ingredients are used in its composition.

The cases that were used as tests are what are known as the St. Paul cases. The defendants claimed that the law was unconstitutional, being class legislation. The supreme court decides the other way, however, and the result will probably be that all baking powder in Minnesota will be properly labeled hereafter.

A Quantity of Bass and Croppies will be Placed in Maple Lake Next Week.

The move to stock Maple Lake with food and game fish is being carried out systematically by several of the people who love the singing of the reel and the fight there is in a bass well hooked.

Among those who have been prominent in the movement are representative Marin, Max Ericsson and A. R. Fuller.

Several months ago a request was made for a supply of fish and this morning word came from the state fish hatchery to Messrs. Ericsson and Fuller to meet an agent of the state who will arrive on Tuesday morning with 16 cans containing a large supply of bass and croppies. These are among the best fish that are being used to stock the lakes of Northern Minnesota.

This will make the fourth lot that has been planted in Maple Lake, the first being pike, which, owing to the fact that the spawn had been hatched but a few days must have nearly all died, as none have been taken with hook and lines.

The croppies that were placed in the lake last spring have already spawned, and numerous young ones an inch in length are noticed along the rocky shores.—Crookston Times.

THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW

Jennie O'Neil Potter, Reader, and Her View of Death

SHE FEARS IT NOT AT ALL

She Wants to Recite a Monologue Telling How the News That She Must Die Came, and Ending With the Counterfeiting of Her Death.

Jennie O'Neil Potter lies in St. Luke's Hospital, New York, knowing that she must die in March, and still she is happy. Her life has been tempestuous; but her death will be calm and peaceful. Hers is a strange nature — presents an extraordinary psychological phenomenon. Jennie O'Neil Potter was one of the best-known elocutionists in the United States. She made herself popular by reciting "How Salvator Won," "Flirts and Matrons" and "Swinging in the Grape Vine Swing." Now she is dying, and knows it. Her great desire—expressed by herself for publication—is to appear once more in public and it to appear once more in public, and if she can summons strength, the doctors will let her do it. A literary friend—to please her—has written a monologue which tells of the scene when the doctors told her she must die, and closes with her death. And this strange woman, looking forward to the end, and now in the Valley of the Shadow, longs to recite it. To a New York newspaper reporter she said the other day:

(Jennie O'Neil Potter.)

"It won't be months; not many, anyway. Father died last March, and he is lying in the little cemetery at Patch Grove, Wisconsin. I wish you could see that little cemetery. It is so, so pretty and cozy in the spring. It will be spring when they take me there—that is, if I go, as I think I will, in March.

"You know, it never looks cold or sad or lonely in our little cemetery. In summer it is just one beautiful bloom of roses—father always loved June roses—and mother and he planted a great many in our plot. I shall be there when they bloom again.

"I have absolutely no fear of death. There has, of course, been a great deal of pain. It was agony, agony, agony. And I'm so happy now to think I shall never have that awful pain again.

"Oh, yes, of course I have treatment. It's horribly painful—and I sometimes think how good it will be [illegible] to have nothing to get pains in. I [illegible] to have no physical body. [illegible] I'm wrong; something remains that can still pain—that can ache and ache. I mean the mind, the heart, the something we call soul.

"Won't it be lovely in Patch Grove when summer comes. I shall [illegible] to see the roses on my [illegible] always lovely then—and [illegible] one of my pet ideas [illegible] that I can see and [illegible] on down here [illegible] human comfort in [illegible]

[illegible] with a terrible [illegible] in my apartments, and some one [illegible] the Bellevue ambulance. [illegible] the doctor came he said if I had delayed five minutes more I would have bled to death. But all the time I wasn't a bit alarmed. [illegible] I didn't think it was anything serious.

"Well, that night in Bellevue I had a most horrible dream. I dreamed that I was in a room alone with a great black horse. Everywhere I noted that he followed me—always with his head on my shoulder—the fright and horror he inspired me with I can't describe, because I have always loved horses—born on a stock farm, you know.

"Well, in trying to escape from him I rushed into an adjoining room. There stood my friend—him I have not. Well, I rushed to him for protection, the horse always by my side. He put out his arms, but somehow he could not clasp me, and then, looking at me sadly, he said:—'Jennie, little girl, it's too late, it's too late.' At that moment—God help me!—I suffered all the agonies possible. I knew, I knew it was my death sentence, and from his lips. Then, suddenly, after what seemed to me centuries of agony, a great peace settled down on my torn heart.

"Then I knew better when the doctors told me it was all over.

"It is too late, poor little girl. Nothing can aid you. Four, five months ago there might have been time. [illegible] you would die on the operating table. Be brave, that's a good child, and enjoy the little of life's sunshine that yet shines for you."

The advice was unnecessary. Never in art, fiction or nature has woman faced and awaited death more courageously, more patiently than does Jennie O'Neil Potter in her little white cot at St. Luke's Hospital in New York, where the cancer is eating her life out.

BIG BILL'S SCHEME.

How He Made a Fortune With His Own Board of Trade.

"As a rule," said a detective at New York headquarters, "crooked people never save their money. I don't care how wise or smart they are, they generally get rid of it faster than they get it. But what I was going to tell you about was one of the gang that had more brains than any of the handshakers I ever knew. I am not going to tell you what his name is, and he is on the level now, lives nicely with his family and stands well with the business community. So, for story-telling purposes, I will tell you about 'Big Bill' and the fortune he made. 'Big Bill' when a lad served the ladies with soda water in a drug store in this city. He was a good-looking lad and was a favorite with every one. Among the patrons of the drug store was a well-known confidence man, who took a fancy to the white-haired lad that tended the soda water fountain. The boy and the 'con' man became fast friends, and one day the boy failed to report for duty. He was not at home and no trace of him could be found. Three years later I ran across him in New York, and he was the clerk in a 'green goods' store, and the gang told me he was the greatest kid in his line that they had ever seen. But he was only getting a very small part of the coin that was being taken off, and one day he declared that he was going out for himself. He quit the job and I didn't hear from him for several years. By this time he was a giant in build and looked to be 30. He was now the brains of a confidence gang, and although those connected with him were years older in experience, what he said was law. The gang operated through the south and west, and were in no way identified with any of the Red Austins, Tom O'Brien and Lon Ludlums, whose names are familiar to the public. Consequently, they had very little trouble with the [illegible].

"The gang made plenty of money, but it was the same old story—wine, woman and song—except as far as 'Big Bill' was concerned. While he had a good time and held up his end, but he was not a 'drunken sailor' with his money. All the time the gang was at work 'Big Bill' was looking for some [illegible] to get into. While in a small town in Colorado he dropped into a bucket shop and at once became interested in the workings. The operator explained the operations and told him how all quotations were sent from the Board of Trade in Chicago. 'Big Bill' at once grasped the situation, and decided upon a scheme of his own. He had a bank roll of about $50,000. So he incorporated a stock exchange just the same as the big Board of Trade in Chicago. Then he opened up. He had his own stock exchange, with all the side issues. He had his elevators, clearing house, grain pit, and everything was just the same as the big market in Chicago. Then he opened offices or bucket shops in 40 small towns throughout the west, south and southwest. The result was he was doing business just the same as the Chicago Board of Trade, except on a small scale. But it was not so small as one would think, for in 14 months he had cleared $700,000. He continued to do business, and the last time I heard of him he had retired from business with over $2,000,000. The business is now operated by a stock company, and 'Big Bill' sits by and gets his take off just as regularly as he takes his coffee."

DEADLY POISONS.

Just a Whiff From Some of Them Will Kill

The discoverer of prussic acid was instantly killed by inhaling one whiff of his own handiwork.

Pure prussic acid is never sold or handled. The smell of it is always fatal. It kills not in three minutes or half an hour, but the instant it enters the lungs as gas. The mixture ordinarily sold as prussic acid is 98 parts water to 2 parts of the drug. Even in this form it is very deadly. A 20 per cent. mixture of the acid would kill nearly as quickly as if pure.

Nicotine, though it has no harmful [illegible] is so deadly that as much of it as would adhere to the end of a moistened forefinger would instantly cause death.

Cyanide of potassium has a pleasant smell, which is not injurious, but a small quantity swallowed kills at once. Pure ammonia, if inhaled, would cause death almost as quickly as prussic acid.

When a carboy of nitric acid is broken some one has to suffer. It will burn wood, eat through iron [illegible] and destroy whatever it touches. Such an accident once happened in an acid factory. Every one ran out, leaving the acid to amuse itself by setting fire to things. Soon it was seen that the building would be destroyed and hundreds of people thrown out of work, and four men volunteered to put out the fire in the acid room. They succeeded and came out feeling all right. Five hours later they were all dead.

A striking use of the X-rays is to be made in the case of two sisters who are joined together in the same manner as the celebrated Siamese twins. These girls were recently discovered in Brazil, and have reached the age of [illegible] years. The examination of the X-rays is to be made with a view to determining whether the bond joining the two bodies can be severed by a surgical operation.

A Glasgow surgeon says that appendicitis is common because of the habit of sitting with one leg crossed over the other. The surgeon argues that in crossing the legs [illegible] the right leg that is [illegible] on the stretch, food passes into the vermiform appendix, and sets up an inflammation.

Emma Goldman, the Anarchist, says that she "washes her hands of the American working man." It is considered a departure for an Anarchist to wash anything, even metaphorically speaking.—Kansas City Star.

The Spanish are among the most charitable people on earth. Without a poor tax, Spanish communities of [illegible] self-supporters feed a pauper population of 5,000 or more.

RAISED HER FROM THE DEAD

Explanation of An Alleged Wonderful Miracle.

SANDFORD TO HIS CRITICS

Miss Olive A. Mills Asserts That After Having Died She Was Brought to Life by the Chief of the Holy Ghost and Us Society.

If the testimony of all the one hundred and fifty inmates of the temple is to be believed, the Rev. Dr. Frank Sandford, Chief of the Holy Ghost and Us School, and leader of the world's evangelization movement, with its headquarters at Shiloh, Me., has raised from the dead Miss Olive A. Mills, who has been for some time a dweller of the temple.

People in his section who have been watching the progress of affairs on the Durham sand hill are at a loss to understand how this latest manifestation at Shiloh shall be characterized. The scattered population about is composed of hard-headed Yankee farmers. The events of the last four or five years on the hill are almost too much for their credulity and yet in the next breath after expressing doubts as to some things they will tell the listener that they have found Mr. Sandford and his disciples the best citizens the town has had. They pay their bills promptly; they feed the hungry. All are welcome at the temple. The persons who dwell there devote themselves to a life based upon all the precepts of the Bible to the letter.

In seven years Sandford has built the great temple without passing the contribution box, has erected a children's building near by—a structure of stone—and has completed and quite fully equipped a $25,000 brick building that is called "Bethesda," and which is used as a hospital for the healing of persons by the power of God.

In this building of Bethesda was wrought the alleged miracle that has attracted such wide attention. When a bare outline of the story had been published in the local papers, and had made the rounds of the press, the mail for Shiloh (the temple has a postoffice of its own) increased to hundreds of letters daily. People all over the United States have been asking for additional facts and seeking corroboration.

Miss Mills has made the following written statement:

"I had been ill for several days at Shiloh, but I was not very much worried at first. Then I grew worse. The elders at Shiloh prayed for me, but in spite of their appeals, I knew I passed out of this life. I knew when my jaw dropped. It was death. Then for a time I was in darkness. It seemed to me as though I was groping about somewhere and somehow, trying to find exit from some place in which I was imprisoned. Then it seemed that I rose gradually out of and above my body. The 'I' in me rose. I don't have any idea what this second self looked like. I never thought of that part. I simply understood that I rose above what I realized was the body in which I had dwelt. I could look down upon it. I could see the people gathered around it as it lay on the bed.

"Then Mr. Sandford came in and looked at me and knelt. Oh! I was so afraid that he would pray loudly. Voices were something awful to me. I felt I knew just what all were thinking about. I didn't need words. He prayed in a whisper. That brought quiet. Then it seemed to me that I was content to drift away. Some force impelled me away from the room and those friends. It seemed that I went through a valley of darkness, or, passing through a dark tunnel. I felt rather than saw that there was light—a great radiance—at the other end. Slowly I drew forward into that light. And as the light gleamed brighter and brighter my joy grew more and more profound. I knew that I was approaching the Kingdom of God Almighty. I was afraid just a moment—there in the dark; then I got out of the fear into the great, wonderful peace of God that I shall never forget. I know I went almost to heaven. I know—I know that, for the joy touched my spirit. As you approach a vineyard you scent the fragrance of the grapes before you get where they are. Well, I was near enough to heaven for the fragrance of it to touch my spirit. It was beautiful!

"Then, from away back somewhere, came thinly and faintly the words, 'In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, Olive Mills, come back.'

"And again I was over the body from which I had departed. The people were gathered about. It seemed to me that this poor, sunken casket of flesh was some old, soiled, discarded garment. I rebelled at putting it on again. But I knew that there was good reason for this command that had been laid upon me. After what I had experienced I was in no mood to withstand the commands of God. So I went back into my body.

In the section round about Shiloh there are all sorts of expressions. The clergymen of Lewiston and Auburn preached sermons on the matter, for it has excited much religious interest in these two cities. These clergymen have been interviewed. All of them state their conviction that Mr. Sandford is sincere, but misguided. When the expression of these opinions was laid before Mr. Sandford he said:

"These men, though honest in their intent, do not believe that God can do this. They practically say so. Therefore, it will never fall within their experience to witness such manifestation of the power of the Holy Ghost. For if God should answer doubt with success He would be putting a premium on unbelief, and practically dethroning faith. They who do not see this thing stand counter to many other worthy Christians who did see it. I never enter into controversies with the churchmen. I have no patience with hair splitters. I don't preach. I practice. And, therefore, the Holy Ghost does by me as He agrees in His Book to do by every man who will follow out His commands, not in their own roundabout way, but in His direct path. Let us be cautious how we strive to make God out a liar."

BEAT THE DEAL BOX.

How a Young Gambler Quit While He Was a Winner.

"I see gambling is running wide open in Colorado again," said Walter Harris, a cattleman of Topeka. "I don't suppose, though, it is as wide open now as it was in the late '80s. I was in Manitou every summer at that time, and the high games that used to run at some of the clubs would be an eye-opener to the gamblers of the present day. Cattlemen were making money then, as were the miners, and they used to meet in Manitou and try for each other's pocketbooks, with the result that the professional gamblers got the money.

"I remember how one young fellow was made to quit a winner against his will. His name was Rich. He was a nephew of one of the big reaper men, and his folks kept him supplied with money, a regular allowance. He had been gambling every cent of it, let his bills pile up for hotel and livery and everything else. His people sent word that they wouldn't send any more money, and said if he got into trouble he'd have to get out himself. His creditors were just about ready to jump onto him, when one night he made a big winning. He was playing in the club that's torn down now, that used to stand over from the depot, and was the place for high play.

"I suppose he had $4,000 or $5,000 in front of him when his friends began trying to persuade him to quit. He was just like all the rest of them, going to break the bank, and all that sort of thing, and he wouldn't quit.

"It was a red-hot night for Manitou, and with the excitement and all Rich had pulled off his coat and rolled up his sleeves. There was a doctor among his friends, and, though he hadn't said any thing to Rich, I suppose he felt a responsibility, because the young fellow had come out here for his health, and had been referred to the Manitou doctor by the doctor he had at home.

"I was watching the play, though I didn't know any of the people. I saw the doctor turn his back to the crowd for a few minutes and fiddle with something he had taken from his pocket. Then he walked over to Rich and put his hand on his bare arm. 'You need a sedative,' he said. Quick as a flash he took the hypodermic syringe he had in his pocket and fired a charge into Rich's arm.

"Rich said 'ouch,' and grabbed at the place where he had been pricked, but the deal was going on and he turned to that again. Before half the cards were out his head settled on the table, he commenced to draw good, long breaths and was asleep.

"The doctor took the chips, cashed them in, then he took, and wrote a receipt for the money and gave it to another friend of Rich's to keep. Then he took Rich, loaded him into a carriage, took him up to his office and watched over him until he came around the next day. Rich paid his bills, but he did no more gambling at Manitou. They wouldn't let him play again."—Denver Republican.

A DAGGER FELL.

And Stabbed a Lady In the Theatre Below.

There are two tiers of boxes in the Comedie Francais, Paris, in which the ladies wear fine dresses. The lower tier projects further into the body of the house than the upper, so that any object falling from the latter, might readily strike a person sitting in the former. While Perrot, the tenor, was revelling in his piercing high notes the other night, a much bejeweled woman in one of the boxes in the second tier, chanced to lean over the rail to gaze at the orchestra stalls. The movement shook a piece of jewelry from her hair, and it fell swiftly into the box beneath. Under some circumstances the ornament would have been lost, but it so happened that it found a sweet and safe resting place. A fresh, big-eyed beauty in the lower box suddenly startled her friends by clutching her pretty neck and exclaiming: "Oh, I think I'm stabbed!" Everybody bent solicitously toward her, demanding to know the trouble. She tapped her breast and gasped: "I felt a sharp weapon strike me here."

At that moment a gentleman entered the box. "Pardon my intrusion," he said, "but my wife in the box above dropped a jewel out of her hair. Have you seen anything of it?"

The lovely girl, who thought herself stabbed, sat upright in her chair and looked frightened. Then she dashed into the back room, from which she returned shortly, and said: "Here is the jewel," holding forth a handsome diamond dagger. Where she found the dagger would have remained a mystery unless a young man, who had been sitting at her side, saw where it dropped just inside her corsage.

The Course of True Love.

Charles Loth, aged 26, was charged recently with the abduction of Olivia B. Newton, less than 15 year old, at Richmond, Va. They went to the station ostensibly to take the train to elope. A rain storm came up and they got in a box car. She said that he detained her there all night, and was so indignant the next day that she refused to have anything more to do with him. Her parents brought a charge of abduction, and the girl told her story to the jury and declared her determination to have no further dealings with her former lover.

Loth was sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary. Recently he secured a new trial. The young woman was seated in the court room with her mother and father while the hearing was going on, and testified, this time in favor of Loth. They had evidently met in some way. While the young woman's parents were absorbed in the question of granting bail and release of Loth, Olivia stole out of the court room to the street, where, it is thought, a cab was in waiting. As soon as the bail and release was granted, Loth hurried out of the court room and joined the young woman. They slipped away so quietly that they were not missed until both were wanted for some further formality. Their absence dumbfounded the parents of the girl and the officers of the court.

They caught a train for Weldon, and will, no doubt, return man and wife, and Loth, instead of serving time in the penitentiary, will only answer for contempt of court.

How He Made a Fortune With His Own Board of Trade.

"As a rule," said a detective at New York headquarters, "crooked people never save their money. I don't care how wise or smart they are, they generally get rid of it faster than they get it. But what I was going to tell you about was one of the gang that had more brains than any of the handshakers I ever knew. I am not going to tell you what his name is, and he is on the level now, lives nicely with his family and stands well with the business community. So, for story-telling purposes, I will tell you about 'Big Bill' and the fortune he made. 'Big Bill' when a lad served the ladies with soda water in a drug store in this city. He was a good-looking lad and was a favorite with every one. Among the patrons of the drug store was a well-known confidence man, who took a fancy to the white-haired lad behind the soda water fountain. The boy and the 'con' man became fast friends, and one day the boy failed to report for duty. He was not at home and no trace of him could be found. Three years later I ran across him in New York, and he was the clerk in a green goods' store, and the gang told me he was the greatest kid in his line that they had ever seen. But he was only getting a very small part of the boodle that was being taken off, and one day he declared that he was going out for himself. He quit the job and I didn't hear from him for several years. By this time he was a giant in build and looked to be 30. He was now the brains of a confidence gang, and although those connected with him were years older in experience, what he said was law. The gang operated through the south and west, and were in no way identified with any of the Red Austins, Tom O'Brien and Lon Ludlums, whose names are familiar to the public. Consequently, they had very little trouble with the law.

"The gang made plenty of money. But it was the same old story—wine, woman and song—except as far as 'Big Bill' was concerned. While he had a good time and held up his end, yet he was not a 'drunken sailor' with his money. All the time the gang was at work 'Big Bill' was looking for some business to get into. While in a small town in Colorado he dropped into a bucket shop and at once became interested in the workings. The operator explained the operations and told him how all quotations were sent from the Board of Trade in Chicago. 'Big Bill' at once grasped the situation, and decided upon a scheme of his own. He had a bank roll of about $50,000. He incorporated a stock exchange just the same as the big Board of Trade in Chicago. Then he opened up. He had his own stock exchange, with all the side issues. He had his elevators, clearing house, grain pit, and everything was just the same as the big market in Chicago. Then he opened offices or bucket shops in 40 small towns throughout the west, south and southwest. The result was he was doing business just the same as the Chicago Board of Trade, except on a small scale. But it was not so small as one would think, for in 14 months he had cleared $700,000. He continued to do business, and the last time I heard of him he had retired from business with over $2,000,000. The business is now operated by a stock company, and 'Big Bill' sits by and gets his take off just as regularly as he takes his coffee."

DEADLY POISONS.

Just a Whiff From Some of Them Will Kill

The discoverer of prussic acid was instantly killed by inhaling one whiff of his own handiwork.

Pure prussic acid is never sold or handled. The smell of it is always fatal. It kills not in three minutes or half an hour, but the instant it enters the lungs as gas. The mixture ordinarily sold as prussic acid is 98 parts water to 2 parts of the drug. Even in this form it is very deadly. A 20 per cent. mixture of the acid would kill nearly as quickly as if pure.

Nicotine, though it has no harmful odor, is so deadly that as much of it as would adhere to the end of a moistened forefinger would instantly cause death.

Cyanide of potassium has a pleasant smell, which is not injurious, but a small quantity swallowed kills at once. Pure ammonia, if inhaled, would cause death almost as quickly as prussic acid.

When a carboy of nitric acid is broken some one has to suffer. It will burn wood, eat through iron plates and destroy whatever it touches. Such an accident once happened in an acid factory. Every one ran away, leaving the acid to amuse itself by setting fire to things. Soon it was seen that the building would be destroyed and hundreds of people thrown out of work, and four men volunteered to put out the fire in the acid room. They succeeded and came out feeling all right. Five hours later they were all dead.

A striking use of the X-rays is to be made in the case of two sisters who are joined together in the same manner as the celebrated Siamese twins. These girls were recently discovered in Brazil, and have reached the age of 19 years. The examination of the X-rays is to be made with a view to determining whether the bond joining the two bodies can be severed by a surgical operation.

A Glasgow surgeon says that appendicitis is common because of the habit of sitting with one leg crossed over the other. The surgeon argues that by crossing the legs, and it is generally the right leg that is put uppermost, the stretch, food passes into the vermiform appendix, and sets up an inflammation.

RAISED HER FROM THE DEAD

Explanation of An Alleged Wonderful Miracle

SANDFORD TO HIS CRITICS

Miss Olive A. Mills Asserts That After Having Died She Was Brought to Life by the Chief of the Holy Ghost and Us Society.

If the testimony of all the one hundred and fifty inmates of the temple is to be believed, the Rev. Dr. Frank Sandford, Chief of the Holy Ghost and Us School, and leader of the world's evangelization movement, with its headquarters at Shiloh, Me., has raised from the dead Miss Olive A. Mills, who has been for some time a dweller of the temple.

People in his section who have been watching the progress of affairs on the Durham sand hill are at a loss to understand how this latest manifestation at Shiloh shall be characterized. The scattered population about is composed of hard-headed Yankee farmers. The events of the last four or five years on the hill are almost too much for their credulity, and yet in the next breath after expressing doubts as to some things they will tell the listener that they have found Mr. Sandford and his disciples the best citizens the town has had. They pay their bills promptly; they feed the hungry. All are welcome at the temple. The persons who dwell there devote themselves to a life based upon all the precepts of the Bible to the letter.

In seven years Sandford has built the great temple without passing the contribution box, has erected a children's building near by—a structure of stone—and has completed and quite fully equipped a $25,000 brick building that is called "Bethesda," and which is used as a hospital for the healing of persons by the power of God.

In this building of Bethesda was wrought the alleged miracle that has attracted such wide attention. When a bare outline of the story had been published in the local papers, and had made the rounds of the press, the mail for Shiloh (the temple has a postoffice of its own) increased to hundreds of letters daily. People all over the United States have been asking for additional facts and seeking corroboration.

Miss Mills has made the following written statement:

"I had been ill for several days at Shiloh, but I was not very much worried at first. Then I grew worse. The elders at Shiloh prayed for me, but in spite of their appeals, I know I passed out of this life. I knew when my jaw dropped. It was death. Then for a time I was in darkness. It seemed to me as though I was groping about somewhere and somehow, trying to find exit from some place in which I was imprisoned. Then it seemed that I rose gradually out of and above my body. The 'I' in me rose. I don't have any idea what this second self looked like. I never thought of that part. I simply understood that I rose above what I realized was the body in which I had dwelt. I could look down upon it. I could see the people gathered around it as it lay on the bed.

"Then Mr. Sandford came in and looked at me and knelt. Oh! I was so afraid that he would pray loudly. Voices were something awful to me. I felt I knew just what all were thinking about. I didn't need words. He prayed in a whisper. That brought quiet. Then it seemed to me that I was content to drift away. Some force impelled me away from the room and those friends. It seemed that I went through a valley of darkness, or, passing through a dark tunnel. I felt rather than saw that there was light—a great radiance—at the other end. Slowly I drew forward into that light. And as the light gleamed brighter and brighter my joy grew more and more profound. I knew that I was approaching the Kingdom of God Almighty. I was afraid just a moment—there in the dark; then I got out of the fear into the great, wonderful peace of God that I shall never forget. I know I went almost to heaven. I know—I know that, for the joy touched my spirit. As you approach a vineyard you scent the fragrance of the grapes before you get where they are. Well, I was near enough to heaven for the fragrance of it to touch my spirit. It was beautiful!

"Then, from away back somewhere, came thinly and faintly the words, 'In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, Olive Mills, come back.'

"And again I was over the body from which I had departed. The people were gathered about. It seemed to me that this poor, sunken casket of flesh was some old, soiled, discarded garment. I rebelled at putting it on again. But I knew that there was good reason for this command that had been laid upon me. After what I had experienced I was in no mood to withstand the commands of God. So I went back into my body."

In the section round about Shiloh there are all sorts of expressions. The clergymen of Lewiston and Auburn preached sermons on the matter, for it has excited much religious interest in these two cities. These clergymen have been interviewed. All of them state their conviction that Mr. Sandford is sincere, but misguided. When the expression of these opinions was laid before Mr. Sandford he said:

"These men, though honest in their intent, do not believe that God can do this. They practically say so. Therefore it will never fall within their experience to witness such manifestation of the power of the Holy Ghost. For if God should answer doubt with success He would be putting a premium on unbelief, and practically dethroning faith. They who did not see this thing stand counter to many other worthy Christians who did see it. I never enter into controversies with the churchmen. I have no patience with hair splitters. I don't preach. I practice. And there on the Holy Ghost does by me as He agrees in His Book to do by every man who will follow out His commands, not in their own roundabout way, but in His direct paths. Let Him be cautious how [illegible] God out [illegible]

BEAT THE DEAL BOX

How a Young Gambler Quit While He Was a Winner.

"I see gambling is running wide open in Colorado again," said Walter Harris, a cattleman of Topeka. "I don't suppose, though, it is as wide open now as it was in the late '80s. I was in Manitoba every summer at that time, and the high games that used to run at some of the clubs would be an eye opener to the gamblers of the present day. Cattlemen were risking money then, as were the miners, and they used to meet in Manitoba and try for each other's pocketbooks, with the result that the professional gamblers got the money.

"I remember how one young fellow was made to quit a winner against his will. His name was Rich. He was a nephew of one of the big reaper men, and his folks kept him supplied with money, a regular allowance. He had been gambling every cent of it, letting bills pile up for hotel and livery and everything else. His people sent word that they wouldn't send any more money, and said if he got into debt he'd have to get out himself. His creditors were just about ready to jump onto him, when one night he made a big winning. He was playing faro in the club that's torn down now. It used to stand over from the depot, and was the place for high play.

"I suppose he had $4,000 or $5,000 in front of him when his friends began trying to persuade him to quit. He was just like all the rest of them, going to break the bank, and all that sort of thing, and he wouldn't quit.

"It was a red-hot night for Manitou, and with the excitement and all Rich had pulled off his coat and rolled up his sleeves. There was a doctor among his friends, and, though he hadn't said anything to Rich, I suppose he felt a responsibility, because the young fellow had come out here for his health, and had been referred to the Manitou doctor by the doctor he had at home.

"I was watching the play, though I didn't know any of the people. I saw the doctor turn his back to the crowd for a few minutes and fiddle with something he had taken from his pocket. Then he walked over to Rich and put his hand on his bare arm. 'You need a sedative,' he said. Quick as a flash he took the hypodermic syringe he had in his pocket and fired a charge into Rich's arm.

"Rich said 'ouch,' and grabbed at the place where he had been pricked, but the deal was going on and he turned to that again. Before half the cards were out his head settled on the table, he commenced to draw good, long breaths and was asleep.

"The doctor took the chips, cashed them in, then he took and wrote a receipt for the money and gave it to another friend of Rich's to keep. Then he took Rich, loaded him into a carriage, took him up to his office and watched over him until he came around the next day. Rich paid his bills, but he did no more gambling at Manitou. They wouldn't let him play again."—Denver Republican.

A DAGGER FELL.

And Stabbed a Lady In the Theatre Below.

There are two tiers of boxes in the Comedie Francaise, Paris, in which the ladies wear fine dresses. The lower tier projects further into the body of the house than the upper, so that any object, falling from the latter, might readily strike a person sitting in the former. While Perrot, the tenor, was revelling in his piercing high notes the other night, a much bejeweled woman in one of the boxes in the second tier, chanced to lean over the rail to gaze at the orchestra stalls. The movement shook a piece of jewelry from her hair, and it fell swiftly into the box beneath. Under some circumstances the ornament would have been lost, but it so happened that it found a sweet and safe resting place. A fresh, big-eyed beauty in the lower box suddenly startled her friends by clutching her pretty neck and exclaiming: "Oh, I think I'm stabbed!" Everybody bent solicitously toward her, demanding to know the trouble. She tapped her breast and gasped: "I felt a sharp weapon strike me here."

At that moment a gentleman entered the box. "Pardon my intrusion," he said, "but my wife in the box above dropped a jewel out of her hair. Have you seen anything of it?"

The lovely girl, who thought herself stabbed, sat upright in her chair and looked frightened. Then she dashed into the back room, from which she returned shortly, and said: "Here is the jewel," holding forth a handsome diamond dagger. Where she found the dagger would have remained a mystery unless a young man, who had been sitting at her side, saw where it dropped just inside her corsage.

The Course of True Love.

Charles Loth, aged 26, was charged recently with the abduction of Olivia B. Newton, less than 15 years old, at Richmond, Va. They went to the station ostensibly to take the train to elope. A rain storm came up and they got in a box car. She said that he detained her there all night, and was so indignant the next day that she refused to have anything more to do with him. Her parents brought a charge of abduction, and the girl told her story to the jury and declared her determination to have no further dealings with her former lover.

Loth was sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary. Recently he secured a new trial. The young woman was seated in the court room with her mother and father while the hearing was going on, and testified this time in favor of Loth. They had evidently met in some way. While the young woman's parents were absorbed in the question of granting bail and release of Loth, Olivia stole out of the court room to the street, where, it is thought, a cab was in waiting. As soon as the bail and release was granted, Loth hurried out of the court room, and joined the young woman. They slipped away so quietly that they were not missed until both were wanted for some further formality. Their absence dumfounded the parents of the girl and the officers of the court.

They caught a train for Weldon and will no doubt return man and wife and Loth, instead of serving time in the penitentiary, will only answer for contempt of court.

SUN'S RAYS HARNESSED.

Wonderful Discovery of a Washington Inventor.

A NEW POWER FOUND

If What He Claims is True, We Shall Soon Need No Steam, Electricity, Wood, Coal Nor Oil—The Sun's Heat.

A Washington inventor claims to have solved a problem upon which scientists have expended years of thought and toil. As is well known to every school boy, the source of all power is the heat and light of the sun. To collect this heat and make it serve mankind at night and by day; to make it do man's drudgery at practically no cost; to make it hew his wood and draw his water, run his railroads, furnish light and heat to cities, propel vessels across the ocean—in short, to substitute it everywhere for the present use of coal and wood and other fuels—has been the dream of De Caus, Herschel and of Ericsson. Professor Langley, of the Smithsonian Institution, has written powerful words calling attention to the necessity for such an invention. He has declared that the human race must depend in the future upon the sun for heat and power. It is a method for the utilization of this heat of the sun in a practical way that Dr. William Calver claims to have discovered. In substantiation of his claim, he attains results which would seemingly convince the most skeptical. Dr. Calver seems thoroughly wrapped up in the work that he has accomplished and the work that he has in view.

(Dr. William Calver.)

"I believe, in fact, I know," said he, in answer to a question, "that I have solved the problem of the direct conversion of the sun's rays into heat, which can be used on a far cheaper commercial basis than coal. I have also devised a method for the storage of this heat, so that it can be used at any desired time and place. I feel that beyond a doubt I have settled forever the question of the actual commercial harnessing of the direct rays of the sun and of their adaptation to the needs of man.

"There is no limit to the intensity of the heat which I can generate. With the concentrated rays of the sun collected against the mountain side I could melt the rocks and cause the earth to burn like a living volcano. I can produce in one spot a heat vaster and more fierce than that on the face of the sun itself, and a greater heat than any now attainable through the combustion of known substances or through the agency of the electric arc, which now furnishes the fiercest heat known to man.

"The cost of this heat for commercial purposes is not a tithe of the cost of digging and raising coal and cutting down timber. With heat thus generated I shall be able to smelt easily the hardest and most rebellious of the ores. With it I shall make a quality of glass which cannot exist at present. With it an innocuous gas can be made at a far less cost than that of our present coal gas.

"This motor consists of the simplest arrangement possible. Each of the small flat mirrors is attached to a gearing device by which it can be moved at pleasure. Each or all of these little surfaces can be concentrated on a very small surface at any desired distance. In practice they are concentrated on the reservoir in the centre of the yard. Each glass reflects from twelve to fifteen degrees of heat from the sun."

"How about the point of concentration when the sun moves around?" was asked.

"That is simple enough," said Dr. Calver. "The frame moves, too. It is geared and adjusted in such a simple manner that it can be moved along the circular track by even the most ignorant of attendants. One man could keep a great number of these machines focused on a single point. All that is required is the occasional adjustment of some pulleys.

"But how about the cloudy and rainy days?" was asked.

"From the 1,600 mirrors in the laboratory here I have generated on the coldest days sufficient heat to weld copper and Russian iron. I have burned a brick half-way through in less than an hour. I have concentrated the combined heat from the mirrors on an unburned brick, and have burned it so hard that it scratched steel."

Dr. Calver picked up a stick from the frozen soil. He mounted the reservoir and focussed the heat of the mirrors upon a portion of the frozen wood. In a moment it cracked, smoked and burst into a fierce flame.

SECRETS OF MONTE CARLO

Lucky Numbers and Some Strange Fatalities

CANDIDATES FOR SUICIDE

Systems Founded on Reasons Which Even the Casino Company Cannot Find Out—The Various Degrees of Damnation of the Place.

I did not stop in Monte Carlo long, but while waiting for a train I went to the gambling house or casino door, gave my name and address, according to custom, received a card of admission and entered the room.

I wandered over to one of the tables which was crowded with players. Just what game was being played I never knew and never asked, for I knew very little about gambling. Probably those who have been there, or are familiar with the "gentle art," will know what the game was when I describe it. The table was covered with green and red cloth, if I am not mistaken which was marked off into spaces, where the players threw their gold. The dealer threw a certain number of cards, face upward, and upon them depended the winnings or losings. One large space seemed to be specially unfortunate for the players. It lost again and again, the croupier taking in the big piles. By and by I threw a twenty-franc gold piece upon the space, thinking it had lost so many times it was now in the law of chance time for it to win. But I was unfamiliar with gambling house methods. The crowd gathered more densely about the table, and I was pushed back by those to the "manner horn." Before I could again get to the table and hold up my money, my 20 franc piece had won six times, doubling, of course, each time. I poured the 1,280 francs into my pocket and left the place. I have, however, since talked with a retired Monte Carlo officer, and he has told me the following, speaking of the roulette wheel:

"Although it is impossible to direct the wheel according to one's wishes that doesn't exclude "system." There are good and bad systems but the majority of those I have seen advanced have in them a kernel of verisimilitude. It's perfectly true that seven times out of ten either "27" or "5" follow upon "zero." Ten years of observation taught me that "4" and "7" are lucky numbers, and that "[illegible]" is invariably followed by "31," "[illegible]" "34," "35" or "36," but the why and wherefore is as much a puzzle to all concerned as the real state of things on Mars. I saw the bank tremble a hundred times under the continuous onslaught of the figures named; then and again I attended deliberations of the directors and the croupiers trying to get at the bottom of the mystery. All theories and combinations, all changes in arrangements of the tables failed. The only remarkable thing repeated examinations by experts yielded was that every wheel has a little idiosyncrasy of its own, some trifling imperfection or superstition causing certain tendencies.

"Of course, suicide candidates profited by this uncontrollable inclination of the wheel as well as the next person, but in most cases the gain was temporary only. When myself and the croupiers of the suicide table saw a man or woman succumb to the gambling fever, we were struck with horror anticipating danger whether the party won or lost, for the respite involved by good luck was hardly of much account, seeing that the amateur who wins never knows when his stroke of good luck is exhausted and jeopardizes his gains as quickly as they are made.

"I am not superstitious by any means, but can't bring myself to doubt that a strange fatality attaches to the so-called suicide table. Its an octopus that sucks in victims from all parts of the globe. Our croupiers are hardened men to be sure—its their business to be soulless, to be machines, but the suicide table has, to my knowledge, given three or four of them heart disease.

"Whether any of the suicide candidates have a foreboding of evil when they come to our table, I don't know; certain it is that few try hard to escape their goal. They come flanked by hunchbacks, loaded down with amulets, primed with prayers, or holding pieces of hangman's rope between their fingers. Others try to insure their fortune by paying the croupier 100 francs before the day's work begins. Of course, he accepts the bribe. Why shouldn't he? He isn't tampering with his employer's profits.

"Nothing daunts these suicide candidates, though. There is a tradition in Monte that combinations and systems "don't go" between the hours of 5:30 and 7:30 p. m., and I am quite sure that there are more exceptions to that rule than to the other inexplainable wheel laws already mentioned. Yet the suicide table is crowded with wheel cranks during these fatal periods, while all other wheels run low.

"One day five seasons ago my neighbor at the table was a young Parisian. He sat in one of the one-death chairs, and won and won. When the doors closed he carried off 200,000 francs. Imagine my dreadful anticipation when, next morning, I found him sitting to the left of the croupier. I felt like tearing him away or slipping a card into his hand warning him against the awful significance of the chair he had chosen, but my official character forbade me to interfere, and, besides, my advice would have been scorned in all probability, for the fellow gambled like one mad. He lost and lost. He lost the winnings of the day before and 200,000 francs of his own money. I saw the cold sweat stand on his face. I saw the goose skin on his head. When his last thousand franc note was gone he rose, and swaying to and fro like a drunkard, stumbled out of the hall, laughing immoderately. The next day he was found dead in his hotel."

Monte Carlo has an irresistible fascination for those who win, but in the long run nine out of every ten are losers. It is a pretty good place for the average person to avoid.

SCARED TO DEATH.

How a Sixth Infantry Soldier Died at Santiago.

"Do you see that name, William S. Sims, on the tablet up there?" said an officer of the Sixth Infantry, pointing to the Sixth Infantry tablet on the face of the water tower at Ft. Thomas. "Well, I want to tell you something very queer concerning the death of that man at Santiago.

"Sims had gone through the hellish fight on the 1st of July, through all the firing while we were in the trenches up to the night of the 9th, when he was on outpost duty. The outpost of each company consists of an officer, a non-commissioned officer and three men. The detail was posted outside the trenches toward the enemy to prevent a party sneaking up on the trenches. One man on post was posted about 50 yards in front of the rest of the party, that lay down, one man being on the alert to listen to the low call of the sentinel if he heard any one coming toward him. Well, about 10:30 that night two shots rang out in rapid succession, and all was excitement in a moment, as there had been no firing since early in the afternoon, and all but a few were asleep, worn out with the strain of the past eight days.

"Running up to that part of the [illegible] line from whence the shots were heard I saw several men bending down over the top of the embankment [illegible] the body of a man. The doctor was with me, and he asked where the man was shot. The Lieutenant who was in command of the outpost detail [illegible]: 'He is not wounded, but he's dead just the same,' and so it proved. The doctor made a careful examination, aided by the bright starlight, and not a wound was to be found on the man, but his heart was still in death.

"What was the matter? Heart disease. It shut off like lightning, and Sims never knew what killed him. The men of the party say they were all lying down asleep except one man. He says when the sentinel fired his shot at a supposed Spaniard [illegible] approaching all of the sleeping [illegible] sprang up at once except Sims, who [illegible] up and then immediately lay back again. The party rushed to the [illegible] part of the sentinel, and on their return found Sims, as they supposed, asleep again, and on shaking [illegible] found him not asleep, but dead. The doctor said no doubt the man had been on such a strain the past few days that his weak heart stopped when he was awakened with such a start, and he fell back a dead man to await the sounding of the bugle's reveille, for he had heard the last on the trumpets of the [illegible] Sixth."

DEAD MEN.

Some Are Found After Battle in Positions of Life.

Surgeon General Mackinnon was one of the first of the Crimean warriors to enter the Redan after it had been evacuated by the Russians. The first thing he saw was a Russian officer sitting on a gabion. His arms were folded across his chest and he appeared to be sleeping, but he was dead, with a rifle ball imbedded in his left breast. There was nothing to show whether he had sat down on the gabion after he had been shot or whether he happened to be sitting there when he was killed.

Dr. Rossbach, of Wurzburgh, tells of a soldier who was killed as he was raising a cup to his lips. The fragment of a shell tore off his skull leaving nothing but the lower jaw.

Nolan, in the celebrated charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, rode for some time, sword in air, a veritable headless horseman.

A British soldier in the Transvaal, searching for missing comrades after the Zulus had disappeared, found one man kneeling behind the outer defenses with his rifle to his shoulder and resting on the parapet as if he was taking aim. He touched him on the shoulder, asking him why he didn't come inside. He fell over. He was dead.

Nor are the eccentricities of shot and shell more curious than those of cold steel. Irving Montagu, a war artist, mentions a case of a Russian and a Turk, who, meeting, fought to the death with fixed bayonets in a wood in Anatolia. The fatal thrusts must have been instantaneous, the strange fact being that both stood, with their legs much apart, each with didn't come inside. He fell over. He adversary's breast, for several days.

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

SUN'S RAYS HARNESSED

Wonderful Discovery of a Washington Inventor.

A NEW POWER FOUND

If What He Claims is True, We Shall Soon Need No Steam, Electricity, Wood, Coal Nor Oil—The Sun's Heat.

A Washington inventor claims to have solved a problem upon which scientists have expended years of thought and toil. As is well known to every school boy, the source of all power is the heat and light of the sun. To collect this heat and make it serve mankind at night and by day, to make it do man's drudgery at practically no cost; to make it hew his wood and draw his water, run his railroads, furnish light and heat to cities, propel vessels across the ocean—in short, to substitute it everywhere for the present use of coal and wood and other fuels—has been the dream of De Coue, Herschel and of Ericsson. Professor Langley, of the Smithsonian Institution, has written powerful words calling attention to the necessity for such an invention. He has declared that the human race must depend in the future upon the sun for heat and power. It is a method for the utilization of this heat of the sun in a practical way that Dr. William Calver claims to have discovered. In substantiation of his claim, he attains results which would seemingly convince the most skeptical. Dr. Calver seems thoroughly wrapped up in the work that he has accomplished and the work that he has in view.

(Dr. William Calver.)

"I believe, in fact, I know," said he, in answer to a question, "that I have solved the problem of the direct conversion of the sun's rays into heat, which can be used on a far cheaper commercial basis than coal. I have also devised a method for the storage of this heat so that it can be used at any desired time and place. I feel that beyond a doubt I have settled forever the question of the actual commercial harnessing of the direct rays of the sun and of their adaptation to the needs of man.

"There is no limit to the intensity of the heat which I can generate. With the concentrated rays of the sun collected against the mountain side I could melt the rocks and cause the earth to burn like a living volcano. I can produce in one spot a heat vaster and more fierce than that on the face of the sun itself, and a greater heat than any now attainable through the combustion of known substances or through the agency of the electric arc, which now furnishes the fiercest heat known to man.

"The cost of this heat for commercial purposes is not a tithe of the cost of digging and raising coal and cutting down timber. With heat thus generated I shall be able to smelt easily the hardest and most rebellious of the ores. With it I shall make a quality of glass which cannot exist at present. With it an innocuous gas can be made at a far less cost than that of our present coal gas.

"This motor consists of the simplest arrangement possible. Each of the small flat mirrors is attached to a gearing device by which it can be moved at pleasure. Each or all of these little surfaces can be concentrated on a very small surface at any desired distance. In practice they are concentrated on the reservoir in the centre of the yard. Each glass reflects from twelve to fifteen degrees of heat from the sun."

"How about the point of concentration when the sun moves around?" was asked.

"That is simple enough," said Dr. Calver. "The frame moves, too. It is geared and adjusted in such a simple manner that it can be moved along the circular track by even the most ignorant of attendants. One man could keep a great number of these machines focused on a single point. All that is required is the occasional adjustment of some pulleys."

"But how about the cloudy and rainy days?" was asked.

"From the 1,600 mirrors in the laboratory here I have generated on the coldest days sufficient heat to weld copper and Russian iron. I have burned a brick half way through in less than an hour. I have concentrated the combined heat from the mirrors on an unburned brick and have burned it so hard that it scratches steel."

Dr. Calver picked up [illegible] the frozen soil [illegible]

SECRETS OF MONTE CARLO

Lucky Numbers and Some Strange Fatalities.

CANDIDATES FOR SUICIDE

Systems Founded on Reasons Which Even the Casino Company Cannot Find Out—The Various Degrees of Damnation of the Place.

I did not stop in Monte Carlo long, but while waiting for a train I went to the gambling house or casino door, gave my name and address, according to custom, received a card of admission and entered the room.

I wandered over to one of the tables which was crowded with players. Just what game was being played I never knew and never asked, for I knew very little about gambling. Probably those who have been there or are familiar with the "gentle art" will know what the game was when I describe it. The table was covered with green and red cloth, if I am not mistaken, which was marked off into spaces, where the players threw their gold. The dealer threw a certain number of cards, face upward, and upon them depended the winnings or losings. One large space seemed to be specially unfortunate for the players. It lost again and again, the croupier raking in the big piles. By and by I threw a twenty-franc gold piece upon the space, thinking it had lost so many times it was now in the law of chance time for it to win. But I was unfamiliar with gambling house methods. The crowd gathered more densely about the table, and I was pushed back by those to the "manner born." Before I could again get to the table and hold up my money, my 20 franc piece had won six times, doubling, of course, each time. I poured the 1,280 francs into my pocket and left the place. I have, however, since talked with an old Monte Carlo officer, and he has told me the following, speaking of the roulette wheel:

"Although it is impossible to direct the wheel according to one's wishes, that doesn't exclude 'system.' There are good and bad systems, but the majority of those I have seen advanced have in them a kernel of verisimilitude. It's perfectly true that seven times out of ten either "27" or "3" follow upon "zero." Ten years of observation taught me that "4" and "7" are lucky numbers, and that "[illegible]" is invariably followed by "31," "[illegible]" "[illegible]," "35" or "36," but the why or wherefore is as much a puzzle to all concerned as the real state of things on Mars. I saw the bank tremble a hundred times under the continuous onslaught of the figures named; time and again I attended deliberations of the directors and the croupiers trying to get at the bottom of the mystery. All theories and combinations, all changes in arrangements of the table failed. The only remarkable thing revealed by examinations by experts was that every wheel has a little idiosyncrasy of its own, some trifling imperfection or superstition exerting certain tendencies.

"Of course, suicide candidates profited by this uncontrollable inclination of the wheel as well as the next person, but in most cases the gain was temporary only. When myself and the croupiers of the suicide table saw a man or woman succumb to the gambling fever, we were struck with horror, anticipating danger whether the party won or lost, for the respite involved by good luck was hardly of much account, seeing that the amateur who wins never knows when his stroke of good luck is exhausted and jeopardizes his gains as quickly as they are made.

"I am not superstitious by any means, but can't bring myself to doubt that a strange fatality attaches to the so-called suicide table. Its an octopus that sucks its victims from all parts of the globe. Our croupiers are hardened men to be sure—its their business to be soulless, to be machines—but the suicide table has, to my knowledge, given three or four of them heart disease.

"Whether any of the suicide candidates have a foreboding of evil when they come to our table, I don't know; certain it is that few try hard to escape their goal. They come flanked by hunchbacks, loaded down with amulets, primed with prayers, or holding pieces of hangman's rope between their fingers. Others try to insure their fortune by paying the croupier 100 francs before the day's work begins. Of course, he accepts the bribe. Why shouldn't he? He isn't tampering with his employer's profits.

"Nothing daunts these suicide candidates, though. There is a tradition in Monte that combinations and systems 'don't go' between the hours of 5:30 and 7:30 p. m., and I am quite sure that there are more exceptions to that rule than to the other inexplainable 'wheel' laws already mentioned. Yet the suicide table is crowded with wheel cranks during these fatal periods, while all other wheels run low.

"One day five seasons ago my neighbor at the table was a young Parisian. He sat in one of the one-death chairs, and won and won. When the doors closed, he carried off 200,000 francs. Imagine my dreadful anticipation when next morning I found him sitting to the left of the croupier. I felt like tearing him away or slipping a card into his hand warning him against the awful significance of the chair he had chosen, but my official character forbade me to interfere, and besides, my advice would have been scorned in all probability, for the fellow gambled like one mad. He lost and lost. He lost the winnings of the day before and 200,000 francs of his own money. I saw the cold sweat stand on his face, I saw the [illegible] [illegible] his head. When his last thousand franc note was gone he rose [illegible] [illegible] like a drunkard [illegible] [illegible]

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER
—BY—
PHIL. A. KAUFER.

Published weekly, Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls.

☞ All matter for publication in THE GAZETTE must be handed in on or before Tuesday 6 p. m.

PROF. McNALLY INDORSED.

The school election is over, and Thos Crompe and Henry Hennemuth are the new members of the Board. The Gazette is pleased to say that Red Lake Falls does not hold two better men than Messrs. Crompe and Hennemuth, and we are perfectly sure that they will act honorably and justly and in the best interests of the schools. We do not believe that they can be coerced, we know that they are manly men, who can be trusted implicitly to do the best for our schools. This will satisfy The Gazette, and this should satisfy every fair-minded citizen.

The Gazette trieo to hold the issue of this school election down to the simple proposition of the best interests ot the schools, and we had hoped that the very weak and unjustifiable dissatisfaction with the schools as administered by Supt. McNally would be given opportun- for a public expiession. We had hoped that the opposition to Prof. McNally would put up men who were avowed belligerents, and directly opposed to the McNally regime, so that tne smallness of the real opposition would be illustrated, even as it was illustrated a year ago, at the ballot box. This was not done. Of the four candidates, it would have been hard to pick which man was the warmest admirer and friend of Supt. McNally and of his work as superintendent. During the white heat of the campaign not one of them could be induced by his nearest friend to say a word in criticism. What were the voters who wished to express themselves on this issue, to do? There was no possible chance for the opposition to the McNally regime to express itself, any more than there would be for Free Silverites to express their disapproval of the Gold standard with only warm advocates of the Gold standard and no Free Silver advocate running. It was a condition exactly similar to this. There were many warm friends of Supt. McNally who voted for Hennemuth and Crompe, but not one enemy of McNally voted for Lachapelie and Schmitz. Outside questions, in no way connected with the interests of the schools, were introduced, by the score, personal quibbles and rancor, the fear of a certain teacher and her friends that her best interests would not be subserved by the election of Schmitz and Lachapelie,—all these questions entered into the campaign. No mistake could be made by the people in their choice of candidates, with the four men that were running, because they were sound to the core, each and every one. The only regret we have is tnat the voters did not have a chance to either repudiate or indorse Supt. McNally. The Gazette holds that if there had been such a chance, his indorsement would have been more clear; it could not have been more emphatic. No stronger testimonial could have been given than that his handful of enemies, who can be counted on the ends of one's fingers, should have been forced by his popularity to put up McNally men, knowing tbat there was not an out-and-out anti-McNally man in the city who would have stood the ghost of a show of being elected.

THE WHEAT SITUATION.

The wheat market has been strengthened by a renewal of the crop damage reports from the Northwest, and also by advices from the Pacific coast to the effect that threshing returns from the California crop were dissappointing, and that the yield of Oregon would be only about 21,000,000 bushels, instead of 30,000,000, as formerly reported. The San Francisco Chronicle estimates the total crop of California at 550,000 tons, which is something under 20,000,000 60-pound bushels, as against an earlier estimate of a crop of 33,000,000 bushels. Advices from various portions of the spring wheat section say that the apparent improvement noted after the rains proves to have deen largely growth of weeds, and the opinion is gaining ground that the government estimate is likely to prove approximately correct.

The only section which has a bumper crop is the Kansas and Oklahoma winter wheat section, but that increased yield is partly offset hy the smallness of the crop in the winter wheat states east of the Mississippi river.

The war situation in China is beginning to cut some figure in the grain markets. It has not affected prices much as yet, but may do so at any moment. The danger lies in Russia becoming embroiled with some of tbe other European powers, through mutual jealously. And even without that, the mobilization of large armies for China will create a demand for large supplies whice can be most conveniently furnished from our Pacific coast. It may thus bappen that all the exportable surplus of the coast states will be diverted to the Orient, and will not come into competition with the wheat of the middle west in the Liverpool markets.

These considerations are giving holders more confidence and encouraging them to believe that 80 or 85 cents a bushel in the Minneapolis and Chicago markets is not too high after all. Dollar wheat is not expected at present, but it may come towards the end of the crop year.

We would advise our farmer friends once more to keep an eye on the traveling fakir who is abroad iu the land, whether he offers groceries, ranges fanning mills or what not. Never buy until you have at least had a chance to compare prices with the home dealer. Not only that, but if the article should prove worthless you have no redress, whereas if you buy from the local merchant he is obliged to remedy any defect. He cannot afford to do otherwise.

The management of the Winnipeg fair has just issued an illustratied program which presents in attractive form an outline of the events of Winnipeg's preatest week, July 23-28, 1900. The Winnipeg exposition is the great entertainment of the northwest, and this year it is to be made bigger and better than ever. Particular interest attaches this year to the fireworks feature, which is to represent "Canada in South Africa, and the Surrender of Gen. Cronje." This is one of the finest pyrothenical productions ever prepared, and it will give our friends across the border an opportunity to let loose some of the war entbusiasm which has thus far found no adequate mode of expression. Friday, July 27 will be American day, and an immense attendance is assured. The veteran bustler, F. Heubach is in cbarge, as usual, and will be glad to furnish any information on applicatiion.

PUNCTURED.

A Story of John T. Raymond, the Actor.

"People who rubberneck in order to overhear the conversetion of folks they don't know often get some pretty twisted notions," said an old-time actor who was here last week. "Here's an example of the way it occasionally works:

"A good many years ago I waa attached to John T. Raymond's company. We were playing at the Park Theatre in Brooklyn. We went over from New York together one evening and took one of the Fulton street cars to ride to the theatre. Now, it happened that on that afternoon the negro murderer Rudd, who was afterward hanged, had hroken out of jail in Brooklyn, and, as the man was a desperate character, the town was more or lese terrorized. However, Raymond and I didn't have that in mind at all when we got to talking about the affairs of a firm of managers with whom we were mutually acquainted.

"'Well, they've got Rudd,' said Raymond to me, referring to an actor of old man's parts, whose services the firm of managers had heen endeavoring to secure for some time.

"There was an eager looking young fellow sitting right next to Raymond, and when the great comedian said, 'They've got Rudd,' you should have seen his eyes stick out.

"'Pardon me,' he said, addressing Mr. Raymond, 'but did I understand you to say that the murderer, Rudd, had heen captured?'

"'Yep,' said Raymond, catching on instantly, and giving me a nudge. 'They pulled him out of a cellar on Houston street, near Third avenue, over in New York, as I was passing there ahout a quarter of an hour ago. He gave the eight policemen the fight of their lives, and shot two of them. Hasn't that got over here yet? Well, I knew Brooklyn was a pretty sleepy old hurg, hut I didn't know it was so bad as that!'

"The eager-eyed young fellow had his pencil and pad out, and Raymond gave him a wealth of detail about the capture of the murderer Rudd from the point of view of an eyewitness.

"Half an hour later the most noteworthy newspaper in Brooklyn was out with an extra giving under a bank head a triple-headed account of the apprehension of the desperate negro murderer, Rudd. It was a 'scoop' all right, hut a 'scoop' that was sadly punctured hy the fact that they didn't get Rudd for many days afterward."—Chicago Record.

No Wonder They Fled.

An authority upon chemistry was lecturing before a well-known woman's club and illustrating his remarks with experiments. All went well until he paused a moment and then said: "I am very sorry, but I must ask any of the ladies who use face powder containing bismuth to leave the room during this experiment, as the gases I am about to set free have a peculiar affinity for bismuth and turn it purple."

Whereupon the entire audience save three courageous sisters rose and fled from the room.—St. Paul Globe.

How Time Does Fly.

GARCEAU BROS.

FACTS ABOUT BANANAS.

Why the Red Banana Has Disappeared—Phases of the Trade.

Red bananas are so scarce nowadays as to be practically a rarity; the prevailing banana is yellow. Twenty years and more ago the red was the prevailing banana and the yellow the rare one. The change from red to yellow was due to commercial reasons: the yellow banana is more profitable.

The yellow banana requires less care and time in cultivation, and so costs less in that stage. It sticks to the stem better than the red banana, and so stands handling better. There are one-third more yellow bananas to the bunch than red. With all these marked advantages in its favor the yellow banana has practically driven the red banana out.

With this great scarcity red bananas now bring fancy prices: it may be ten times as much as yellow bananas. With yellow bananas at $1 or $1.50 a bunch red would be worth from $6 to $11, and there would be fewer in a bunch. Red bananas sell nowadays in the fruit stores as high as twenty cents apiece. The comparatively few bunches imported are taken by dealers in fine and fancy fruits as novelties, the rarity in large measure determining the price. It might be asked why, with red bananas at such a price, more are not cultivated; to which the answer is that if more were raised the price would go down again and there would be no profit in raising them for the general demand, in competition with the more economically produced, more prolific and better shipping yellow bananas. The red banana appears to be now in its scarcity like some other kinds of comparatively rare fruits, or, say like game. Some people prefer the flavor of the red banana, some prefer that of the yellow; it is probable that the great majority would have no choice; and the far lower price at which the yellow banana can be offered to the individual consumer settles the question.

Bananas were never before so cheap as they have been in very recent years. Formerly a luxury that was rather costly than otherwise, the banana is now a cheap luxury; very good bananas can now be bought commonly in the streets in the season at a cent apiece, or ten cents a dozen, such as formerly cost two or three times as much. Formerly bananas were brought to this country in sailing vessels, in slick fast schooners, which, with any sort of favoring conditions, made quick trips; with adverse weather, if long continued, the cargoes rotted. Now bananas are brought by steam, in fast steamers built especially for the fruit trade. These steamers may, of course, be held up by storms, but they are not likely to be; commonly they land cargoes in a specified time, and in the best and most suitable condition for handling and marketing to the best advantage and with the least possible waste, and with advantage as to evenness of supply. The great bulk of the banana trade in this country is now controlled by a company which banana importers have organized.

The bananas eaten in this country come from Costa Rica, British and Spanish Honduras, Columbia, Jamaica and Cuba; that is, from countries around the southern part of the Gulf of Mexico and around the Caribbean Sea. The bulk of the fruit from the Gulf countries goes to New Orleans for distribution, that from the other countries goes to Atlantic ports. For many years bananas have had a more or less wide distribution from the ports of receipts; but they were never before so widely distributed, nor sold so cheaply at interior points, as now. Bananas are now sold, not as rarities, but more or less commonly, in all parts of the country; practically everywhere: the eastern part of the country being supplied from Atlantic ports, and the Mississippi valley and the western half from New Orleans. Costa Rica bananas are now shipped from New Orleans over pretty much all the western country to the Pacific coast.—N. Y. Sun.

The Boer War.

Dr. W. J. Leyds, the Minister of the South African Republic in Europe, in answer to a question as to how long the Boer war will last, says:

"Probably six months. It is impossible to say what the result will be. The two republics are still supplied with everything necessary for the further conduct of hostilities. On this point there can be no doubt."

(Dr. W. J. Leyds.)

"What are likely to be the terms of peace?"

"I can say nothing on that subject. I am cut off from all means of communication from my government. I have absolutely no notion how they are inclined to regard the rumored intention of the British government to surrender Ladysmith. The Boers will look upon the result with equanimity. It will make little or no difference in our plan of campaign. Whichever side of the South African republics is attacked, the Boer soldiers are able to resist to the uttermost an invasion of their territory."

Gathering Them In.

"You're a nice little boy, to bring three new scholars to Sunday school," said the teacher.

"Yas'm," replied conscientious Johnnie. "But dey've promersed to whack up de candy what dey gits at the Crismus festerval wit me."—Philadelphia North American.

TORTURED IN THIBET.

Landor's Fearful Experience in the Centre of Asia.

Arthur Henry Savage Landor, the great Thibetian explorer now in this country, has excited general interest in his remarkable attempt to get to the sacred city of Lhassa. Mr. Landor is a grandson of the famous poet and author, Walter Savage Landor. The account of his attempt to reach Lhassa, the capital of Thibet, and the stronghold of Lamaistic Buddhism, where no white man has ever been, is deeply interesting.

A non-Buddhist is forbidden under penalty of torture and death to enter Lhassa. It is the most mysterious city in the world. Thibet is ruled by the Grand Lama, a priest of the highest orders. Some of the tales told by the explorers are thrilling in the extreme. There is much in them to excite skepticism among those who have neither had first-hand acquaintance with the Thibetans nor suffered similar hardships. They have, however been fully investigated by persons appointed for that purpose, and while these have in a great measure been obliged to depend for information on the statements of the traveler himself, the confirmatory evidence is overwhelming.

Mr. Landor's objective was Lhassa. He reached India in April, 1897, and Garbyang toward the end of the following May. He had with him as attendants a native following of thirty men. What he desired to do was to enter Thibet by the Lippu Lek Pass, but the Jong Pen, of Taklakot, prevented him, and he was obliged to abandon the ordinary trade route of the country and attempt to go through the Lumpia Pass, which is at an altitude of 18,150 feet.

His guides, according to all accounts, were a bad lot, and with dismissals and desertions their number was presently reduced to two, Chanden Sing and Mansing. With these two and two yaks Mr. Landor crossed the Mariam La Pass, and one of the animals went down in the Mo Tsangbo river with the various provisions and personal chattels which it carried. Up to this time Landor doggedly kept out of from the inhabitants, but a hungry man doesn't wait on ceremony, and finally he was obliged to go to the village of Toxem in search of food. Here on August 20, while engaged in bargaining for fresh animals and supplies he and his companions were overpowered and bound.

Hand limbs and body with ropes, he was knocked three times to the ground. The natives stamped and trampled upon him with their heavy boots. With his two guides he was dragged by the rope around his neck to a nearby camp, where a number of soldiers surrounded him. He was taken to a tribunal composed of a number of lamas, who ordered him to kneel. He refused, and they castigated him with knotted and leaded leather thongs. They then took his notes and maps and demanded to know why he had made sketches of the holy land.

Following a night's confinement in a lonesome and vermin-infested tent, the explorer was brought forth by a number of soldiers. What happened then Mr. Landor tells in his own dramatic style as follows:

"'Oh,' shouted he, striking me on the shoulder with his heavy hand, the usual way of addressing people in Thibet. 'Oh,' repeated he again, 'before the sun goes down to-day you will be tortured; they will break both your legs, they will burn out your eyes and then cut off your head.' He accompanied each sentence with a gesture, as if illustrating his words. I roared with laughter. I could but think that this was merely said to intimidate me, though the man seemed quite in earnest, and this made me laugh all the more."

Finally, after such suffering as led him to believe that they were in earnest, he was calmly informed that he was to be beheaded immediately. The natives secured him to a prism-shaped log on the ground, his legs as wide apart as they could be stretched, and a man gripping him by the hair. Then the explorer was subjected to further tortures.

"The Pombo raised his arm and held a red-hot iron bar parallel to and within an inch or two from my eyes," Mr. Landor says, "almost touching my nose. Instinctively I kept my eyes tightly closed, but the heat was so intense that it seemed as if my eyes, the left one especially, were being desiccated and my nose burned. Though the time seemed interminable, I do not think that the red bar was before my eyes actually more than thirty seconds or so, but it was quite long enough, for when I lifted my aching eyelids I saw everything as in a red mist. My left eye was frightfully painful, and every few seconds it seemed as if something in front of it obscured its vision. With the right eye I could still see fairly well, except that everything, as I have said, looked red instead of its natural color."

The executioner, now close to the explorer, "held the sword with his nervous hands lifting it high above his shoulder. He then brought it down to my neck, which he touched with the blade, to measure the distance as it were, for a clean, effective stroke. Then, drawing back a step, he swiftly raised the sword again and struck a blow at me with all his might. The sword passed dangerously close to my neck, but did not touch me. Apparently against his will, the executioner went through the same kind of performance on the other side of my head. This time the blade passed so near that the point cannot have been more than half an inch or so from my neck."

There had been, it appears, no real intention to execute him, and following a night of tortures on a diabolically contrived rack, he was placed on a pony's back and, with the Thibetan guard, sent back to the frontier. The Rev. Harkue Wilson, by whose intervention Landor and his two servants were saved afterward investigated the story at the request of the Indian government. He reported that the main facts are true.

It is related that, while preaching from his text, "He giveth His beloved sleep," a Toledo minister stopped in the middle of his sermon, gazed upon his sleeping audience and said, "Brethren, it is hard to realize that wondrous, unbounded love the Lord appears to have for a good portion of this congregation.

WALCOTT WEAKENED

He Didn't Want to Buy Wine, But He Was Compelled To.

Joe Wolcott had an experience at Corbett's place at New York the other night, which serves to make him more careful about making offers to buy wine. Walcott knew that colored negroes are not wanted at Corbett's, and after indulging liberally in wine, bought by his manager, Tom O'Rourke, and some sports, Joe remarked:

"Ah jest like to buy all ob you gentlemen a quaht oh wine, but, mah word, they won't let no culled man buy nothin' here. Ah feel right mean not to be able to reciprocity you all's drinks."

Just then John R. Considine who owns a half interest in the place, came along, and O'Rourke, winking, remarked:

"Say, John, break your rule once, and let Joe buy. He wants to, and his money's good."

"Well, seeing that you ask the favor, Joe can go as far as he likes this time," said Considine.

Joe turned ashen at the prospect of buying wine for the party, which now numbered fully a dozen. He tried to sneak out.

"Ah'm feelin' kindy faint. I guess that 'ere wine goin' to make me sick. I've got to get fresh air."

"No, you don't!" cried the bunch. "It's no honor for you to be allowed to buy for us. Do you want to spend your money with colored folks?"

"Good Gwad, no! I don't get no money offen colored folks. De white folks keeps me."

"You said you wanted to buy—were you four-flushing? Be game," said O'Rourke sternly.

"Well, Mistah O'Rourke, to done tell de truf, I's disremembered dat I left my money at home. I ain't got de price. I fully appreciate de honah you do me."

"Don't speak to me again! You are a deuce in a discarded deck," said O'Rourke. Some one bought, and Walcott laughed. He was not offered a drink, and no one spoke to him.

Then he weakened.

"I'se a poor man, but I'll jest buy the wine for de crowd. It's goin' to break me, but you're all my frien's."

It took four quarts to satisfy the thirst of the crowd, and as Joe handed over the bills tear drops glistened on the top one like dewdrops on the sward.

AN AERIAL FLIGHT.

Extraordinary Adventure of an Italian Peasant Woman.

Teresa Falciola, an Italian peasant woman met recently with an extraordinary adventure. Near her home, in the village of Quarna, which nestles in a spacious valley, is a high and wooded mountain, and there it was her custom to go several times a week for the purpose of collecting firewood. To bring this wood down from the precipitous mountain to her cottage was quite an arduous task. Therefore she sent it down by means of a strong metal wire, stretched from the valley up to the mountain top.

A few weeks ago she and her little daughters ascended the mountain, and, after gathering three goodly bundles of wood prepared to send them down. Just, however, as the mother had fastened the first bundle to the wire, and had launched it on its downward course, her wedding ring became caught in the rope with which the bundle was tied, and in a flash she was carried off her feet and swept downward into the valley. Half paralyzed with fear, her little daughters watched her as she sped from their sight with amazing swiftness, and then they ran down the mountain, fully expecting to find her lying dead at the end of the wire.

And their fear was quite natural, since the mountain top from which their mother had been torn is eight hundred yards above the valley. Fortunately, their fears proved to be groundless. They found their mother entirely uninjured. Yet, miraculous indeed, was it that her life had not been crushed out of her at the end of her perilous descent. It would have been if her fall had not been broken before she reached the earth by some friendly branches. The bundle of wood, too, was in some measure a bulwark against the shock.

Pirates Still in Canton.

A daring raid by a body of pirates on one of the Canton jails for the purpose of releasing one of their chiefs, who was lying there under sentence of death, was made at the end of October, but the details were suppressed by the local authorities. A band of about eighty pirates attacked the jail and overpowered the warders. They then liberated their comrade and eleven other bandits who were also under sentence of death, and fought their way back to their boats, killing a number of the city train bands who were called out to intercept them. During the running fight two of the pirates were killed, but the rest got away. The Empress Dowager, on receiving the news of this exploit, though some of the details were concealed from her and from the Viceroy, cashiered the governor of the jail and ordered an inquiry to ascertain whether he was in collusion with the pirates. She also ordered the trial of the local magistrate who was responsible for the security of the prison, and gave him the usual period of three months within which to recapture the liberated criminals and the pirates who released them.—London Times.

Had Three Wives Visit Him.

Jimmy Farrell, who is locked up in the county jail at Detroit, Mich., charged with being disorderly, is a wizard with the ladies. He has a pug nose and red whiskers. Every day three wives call upon him, meeting at the jail and going up to the cell together. All three claim to be married to Farrell, and he does not deny it, receiving their presents of pipes, tobacco, preserves, cakes, etc., with a bored expression. They are known by numbers with the jail officials. No. 1 is a colored woman, No. 2 a prepossessing white woman, and the third is a white woman old enough to be his mother. The strange trio are not jealous, and even greet each other with warmth, and when the daily interview is over leave the jail together, supporting the colored woman, who is a cripple. Farrell was recently stabbed by a jealous colored rival.

Vic's Letter.

Tarloe, P. I., June 11, 1900.

To The Gazette:

It is with pleasure that I take the time to drop The Gazette a few lines to let its readers know what we are doing here.

The veteran cavalry leader, Gen. S. M. B. Young, who is now in command as governor of the district of Northwestern Luzon, P. I., has made a very brilliant campaign, starting from San Francisco de Pampanga, within forty miles of Manilla and covering the whole of the northern two thirds of the Island of Luzon with his cavalry, sometimes coming on the insurgents a month ahead of their calculations, often striking them in three places at the same time, and scattering them so badly that they have never since been able to come together. The insurgents were strictly "demoralized" but the ladrones were not.

Our troops are continually chasing the brigand bands and have great success here in the north, half of the expeditions sent out returning with their prey, the rest finding hiding places from which the briganders had flown.

On June 2nd we went out and found where some ladrones or robbers usually camped and on June 5th we set out at about 11:30 p. m. and by day light there were one hundred thirth-seven insurgents' former soldiers, but now robbers and briganders, in the hands of the garrison of Farloe. Again on June 7th we went out and captured, with little resistance, two colonels and three other officers and some 100 men with sixty-four Remington and 6 Monser rifles. On the 8th we went out again and made a sortof a goose chase, riding 36 hours through the rain and wet, seeing nothing. A detachment of our troop went out to-day to search of more of those fellows who we did not see while on our last "hike."

We hear that Gen. Del Pilar has come in at Manilla and given himself up to the authorities, stating he has seen his case is hopeless and that he would have all his men throw down their arms. There is General Meo Bnios and the ladrones out yet but we shall soon have them all.

I must now say a few words about this town Farloe, the once stronghold of the insurgents. It is a little town which reminds me of Red Lake Falls before the G. N. was built in there. The main part of the town and the depot of the Manilla & Dagupon R. R. are seperated by a road through the bamboo about three quarters of a mile long. We have a patrole that does duty along this road every night, and herds the several hundred prisoners of war we have the next day. There are several fine buildings in this town, equal in appearance to many in our American cities. The town is now filled with prisoners and I dare say that during the last month and a half over three thousand rifles have been turned over to the provost marshal of the town, all of which cost Uncle Sam $15 of American money or $30 Spanish.

Now allow me to say a few words about the natives of the Island of Luzon. These tribes correspond to our various tribes of Sioux, Apaches, Crows, Chippewas, etc., differing in language and minor customes. They have a great fear of firearms and the white soldiers, as brave and warlike as they undoubtedly are. Most of these that will fight belong to the Tagalos race, who predominate in the southern provinces, and are very numerous and influential, and are almost wholly responsible for the insurrections. They are crafty and dangerous, either as friends or enemies. Having originated the rebellion they filled all the high offices with people of their own tribe, and then proceeded to force the Ilocanos to join them.

The Ilocanos, the tribe that populates the northern provinces, is a far more superior tribe to the Tagalos in everything excepting cunningness and number. They are suprisingly intelligent and seem to know as much as we do about agriculture and considerable more than we do about the common sense matter of living. They build homes and towns and are managing a teeming population. Ignorant as we were when we came to this country to "civilize" it we are wiser now and are learning as well as the natives.

One cannot help but like the country to a certain extent. The climate, excepting the rainy season, is fine after one gets used to it. The soil produces wonders in rice, sugar, tobacco, corn, indigo and even vegetables which we are familiar with in the United States. There are around this city forests of mahogany wood which if it was used in better mills would be worth thousands of dollars and perhaps millions, but there are no mills here to utilize the wood.

The Spanish system was fine in theory but the "fraiies" have been the ruin of it. They have farmed out the church lands to the poor tenants at ruinous rates, and have been the tyrants of this beautiful island to and extent difficult to believe. They have made slaves of the tenants amassed great wealth for themselves and through their political influence in Spain, destroyed whoever opposed them. The people are Catholics from the cradle up, and reverence the priests; but hate the frailles fiercely and there will be a revolt if our government ever permits their reinstatement. The insurrection has driven the frailes out of every town while the priests remain, save those who joined insurgents to assist them in getting rid of the frailles who seem to have excited the hatred of all classes through greed and immorality. There is much difference in the old Spanish government and the system the U. S. government is establishing.

This is all for this time as I would have a lot more to say but room and time does not permit.

WALCOTT WEAKENED

He Didn't Want to Buy Wine, But He Was Compelled To.

Joe Walcott had an experience at Corbett's place at New York the other night, which serves to make him more careful about making offers to buy wine. Walcott knew that colored negroes are not wanted at Corbett's, and after indulging liberally in wine, bought by his manager, Tom O'Rourke, and some sports, Joe remarked:

"I'd jest like to buy all ob you gentlemen a quaht ob wine, but, mah word, they won't let no culed man buy nothin' here. Ah feel right mean not to be able to reciprocity you all's drinks."

Just then John R. Considine who has a half interest in the place, came in, and O'Rourke, winking, remarked:

"Say, John, break your rule once, and let Joe buy. He wants to, and his money's good."

"Well, seeing that you ask the favor, Joe can go as far as he likes this time," said Considine.

Joe turned ashen at the prospect of buying wine for the party, which now numbered fully a dozen. He tried to get out.

"Ah'm feelin' kindy feint. I guess that 'ere wine goin' to make me sick. I've got to get fresh eir."

"No, you don't!" cried the bunch. "It's an honor for you to be allowed to buy for us. Do you want to spend your money with colored folks?"

"Good Gwed, no! I don't get no money offen colored folks. De white folks keeps me."

"You said you wanted to buy—were you four-flushing? Be game," said O'Rourke sternly.

"Well, Mistah O'Rourke, to done tell de truf, I's dieremembered dat I lef' my money at home. I ain't got de price. I folly appreciate de honah you do me."

"Don't speak to me again. You are a deuce in a discarded deck," said O'Rourke. Some one bought, and Walcott laughed. He was not offered a drink, and no one spoke to him.

Then he weakened.

"I'se a poor men, but I'll jest buy the wine for de crowd. It's goin' to break me, but you're all my frien's."

It took four quarts to satisfy the thirst of the crowd, and as Joe handed over the bills tear drops glistened on the top one like dewdrops on the sward.

AN AERIAL FLIGHT.

Extraordinary Adventure of an Italian Peasant Woman.

Teresa Felciola, an Italian peasant woman met recently with an extraordinary adventure. Near her home, in the village of Querna, which nestles in a spacious valley, is a high and wooded mountain, and there it was her custom to go several times a week for the purpose of collecting firewood. To bring this wood down from the precipitous mountain to her cottage was quite an arduous task. Therefore she sent it down by means of a strong metal wire, stretched from the valley up to the mountain top.

A few weeks ago she and her little daughters ascended the mountain, and, after gathering three goodly bundles of wood prepared to send them down. Just, however, as the mother had fastened the first bundle to the wire, and had launched it on its downward course, her wedding ring became caught in the rope with which the bundle was tied, and in a flash she was carried off her feet and swept downward into the valley. Half paralized with fear, her little daughters watched her as she sped from their sight with amazing swiftness, and then they ran down the mountain, fully expecting to find her lying dead at the end of the wire.

And their fear was quite natural, since the mountain top from which their mother had been torn is eight hundred yards above the valley. Fortunately, their fears proved to be groundless. They found their mother entirely uninjured. Yet, miraculous indeed, was it that her life had not been crushed out of her at the end of her perilous descent. It would have been if her fall had not been broken before she reached the earth by some friendly branches. The bundle of wood, too, was in some measure a help to work against the shock.

There are several fine buildings in this town, equal in appearance to many in our American cities. The town is now filled with prisoners and I dare say that during the last month and a half over three thousand rifles have been turned over to the provost marshal of the town, all of which cost Uncle Sam $15 of American money or $30 Spanish.

Now allow me to say a few words about the natives of the Island of Luzon. These tribes correspond to our various tribes of Sioux, Apaches, Crows, Chippewas, etc., differing in language and minor customes. They have a great fear of firearms and the white soldiers, as brave and warlike as they undoubtedly are. Most of these that will fight belong to the Tagalos race, who predominate in the southern provinces, and are very numerous and influential, and are almost wholly responsible for the insurrections. They are crafty and dangerous, either as friends or enemies. Having originated the rebellion they filled all the high offices with people of their own tribe, and then proceeded to force the Ilocanos to join them.

The Ilocanos, the tribe that populates the northern provinces, is a far more superior tribe to the Tagalos in everything excepting cunningness and number. They are suprisingly intelligent and seem to know as much as we do about agriculture and considerable more than we do about the common sense matter of living. They build homes and towns and are managing a teeming population. Ignorant as we were when we came to this country to "civilize" it we are wiser now and are learning as well as the natives.

One cannot help but like the country to a certain extent. The climate, excepting the rainy season, is fine after one gets used to it. The soil produces wonders in rice, sugar, tobacco, corn, indigo and even vegetables which we are fimiliar with in the United States. There are around this city forests of mahagony wood which if it was used in better mills would be worth thousands of dollars and perhaps millions, but there are no mills here to utilize the wood.

The Spanish system was fine in theory but the "frailes" have been the ruin of it. They have farmed out the church lands to the poor tenants at ruinous rates, and have been the tyrants of this beautiful island to and extent, difficult to believe. They have made slaves of the tenants amassed great wealth for themselves and through their political influence in Spain, destroyed whoever opposed them. The people are Catholics from the cradle up, and reverence the priests; but hate the frailes fiercely and there will be a revolt if our government ever permits their reinstatement. The insurrection has driven the frailes out of every town while the priests remain, save those who joined insurgents to assist them in getting rid of the frailes who seem to have excited the hatred of all classes through greed and immorality. There is much difference in the old Spanish government and the system the U. S. government is establishing.

This is all for this time as I would have a lot more to say but room and time does not permit.

Terrebonne, Edonor Perusse, Ovilla Rock.

The following report of the committee on resolutions was adopted:

The People's Party, or Red Lake Co., in convention assembled, re-affirm their allaginnce to the fundamental principles of just government declared by the founders of the Republic, and adopted and announced by our party in its state and national platforms.

We believe, with Lincoln, "That our government is of the people, by the people and for the people," and the prime function of the government is to protect the weak against the aggression of the strong, to promote the generel welfare, and to secure to all the rights of life, liberty and pursuit of happiness.

We are unalterably opposed to wars of conquest and colonial possessions and we condemn the action of the present republican administration, forcing upon a liberty loving people a government not of their own, and imposing upon them taxation without representation, thereby violating one of the main principles for which the founders of our government fought and bled.

We strongly condemn the action of our congressman, Frank M. Eddy, in disregarding the wishes of his constituents and voting for the Porto Rican Tariff Bill, which is unjust in principal and repugnant to the voters of his district

We favor the "Initiative and Referendum" applied to legislation, i. e., the direct vote of the people upon all important public questions.

We denounce the system of combined capital, resulting in combinations and trusts, which has been fostered and protected by the Republican party, which systam has and is building up large fortunes in the hands of tha few, closing the door of opportunity to the young men of the country, and lessening the chances of men of small capital in business; such system is unjust and un-American, and destructive to the ends of good government.

We believe that the money in circulation should be fixed at a specified amount per capita, and the volume of money increased to correspond with the increase of population, to the end that the greatest possible stability of prices may be maintained, thus enabling the debtor to pay his debts with dollars of no greater purchasing power than that which he received when the debt was contracted.

As there is nothing in our laws, nor in the morel obligations of the people requiring them to pay public or private debts in a different kind of money than that specified in the contract, we condemn the Republican party for attempting to make our coin obligations payable in gold.

We earnestly commend the able, honest and patriotic administration of Gov. Lind.

By a cruel war, costing hundreds of thousands of lives and millions of dollars worth of property, filling our land with widows and orpans, and leaving ruins in its wake, it was decided that no law of the U. S. shall ever be nullified. We denounce President McKinley for nullifying the Canteen law and demand that our officials enforce all laws on our statute books.

We believe that there are enough able, competent men among the rank and file of the People's Party to fill all Co. offices, therefore be it resolved that this convention recognize no candidates for nomination for county officies known to belong to other political parties.

Nominations were next in order for tha office of auditor. The first ballot gave it to Zeh, the vote standing Zeh, 25, Finka, 15.

For traasurer, there being no opposition, tha secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the convention for O. T. Tandberg.

Supt of Schools, Jaffers, 37, Dupont, 3.

Register of deeds, first ballot, Gibeau, 20, Perusse, 17, Hamry, 2. Second ballot, Gibeau, 21, Perusse, 19.

Sheriff, Moran, 25, Bleau, 11, Ducamp, 4.

Co. Attorney, first ballot, Grady, 18, Boughton, 12, Lee, 10. Second ballot, Grady, 25, Boughton, 7, Lee, 7.

Considerable of a scrap was engendered here, an effort being made to keep Lee out of the convention, on the charge that he was a democrat. Lee declared himself an independent candidate, but edmitted that he wes a democrat.

Surveyor, Phil Zeh, 23, Stecy, 16, Haggland, 5.

Coroner, Joseph Belair, without opposition.

Commissioner 2d district, Beleir, 6; Qnesnell, 4

Commissioner 4th district, Jarmon, 4, Tweet, 3.

Representative, Hansen, 17, Swanson, 21.

Philip Zeh Declines.

Thanking the county convention for the honor conferred upon me by the nomination for county surveyor, I desire to say, that I was not a candidate for that or any other office before the convention, and must respectfully decline to have my name go on the ticket.

Philip Zeh.

Married.

Mr. George Brown and Miss Mary Claus were married at the home of the bride's parents Thursday evening at 6 o'clock, the Rev. S. J. S. Moore officiating. A pretty form was observed, the party marching from the dining room to the parlor, as in a church wedding. Miss Anna Claas, a sister of the bride, was maid of honor, while Mr. Chas. Tuiley was best man.

Mr. Brown, the groom, has been a resident of the city a comparatively short time. He is a contractor and builder. The bride is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. August Claas, who are among our earliest pioneers. The newly-married couple will make their home with the bride's parents, and a new residence will be put up for the family on the site of the old Claas homestead.

The Gazette extends best wishes.

CHINA WANTS PEACE

MINISTERS HELD AS HOSTAGES PENDING NEGOTIATIONS.

Imperial Edict Instructs Viceroys to Negotiate Peace With the Powers—Viceroys Are Commanded Not to Allow a Single Foreigner to Escape — Gen. Tung Fuh Siang Threatens to Kill All Legationers If International Forces Advance on Peking—Washington Expects Important News.

London, July 31.—The Shanghai correspondent of the Daily Express, telegraphing yesterday, says:

"A new imperial edict promulgated this evening urgently orders all viceroys and provincial governments to endeavor to negotiate peace with the powers, whose ministers are held as hostages pending result of overtures for the abandonment of hostilities against China. The viceroys are also commanded to guard their territories vigilantly against attack and to prevent by all means in their power the advance of the foreign troops, and especially along the Yang-tse kiang. The decree says that the officials will answer with their lives for any failure to execute these orders. Commands are also given that should be allowed to escape from the interior, where there are still fully 2,00 Europeans connected with missionary work in isolated situations. When the governor of Shangtung communicated to the consuls the imperial decree of July 24 he omitted important passages addressed to Li Hung Chang: 'It is admittedly inadvisable to kill all the ministers, but it is equally unwise to send them to Tien-tsin. It will be much wiser to keep the survivors at Peking as hostages. You are commanded to hasten to Peking. You are incurring imperial displeasure by delay. You have been appointed viceroy to Chili because, with your military experience you will successfully lead the imperial armies in Chili, which Yu Lu, the present viceroy, is unable to do owing to his ignorance of military matters.'

Against the Foreigners

"Li Hung Chang replied to this edict, asking to be allowed to retire on account of his age. Sheng now admits that he has telegrams since July 19 announcing that every foreigner in Pao-tingfu was murdered, including forty British, French and American missionaries, and announcing also that two French Jesuits and a thousand converts have been massacred at Kwang-pingfu, on the borders of Shangtung and Chili. A majority of the consuls favor strong measures against Sheng's duplicity."

CRISIS FAST APPROACHING.

Situation in China Steadily Becoming Darker.

The Shanghai correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says he is still firmly convinced that the ministers are safe, but, with the exception of an alleged message from the Japanese legation in Peking dated July 19, brought by a runner, saying that the legation was still defending itself, nothing has yet been published giving anything in the nature of proof. On the other hand, the daily incoming reports of the massacre of missionaries and foreigners leaves only the most slender thread upon which to hang a hope. The general situation is steadily becoming darker, and a crisis is said to be fast approaching. It is rumored in Shanghai that 10,000 Chinese troops have been secretly moved into that vicinity, and that the commander of the Kiang Yu forts has been ordered to fire if any further addition is made to the number of foreign warships ascending the river. Rioting already has occurred at Kiu kiang, the mobs threatening death to foreigners. With the arrival of the second Japanese division the allied forces at Taku and Tien-tsin will number 70,000. The river floods near Tien-tsin are diminishing. It is reported that Russians from Harbin have arrived at a point 150 miles north of Peking after severe fighting.

SOMETHING BIG LOOKED FOR.

News of the Utmost Importance Expected in Washington.

Washington, July 31. — There is a growing expectation at the state department that news of the utmost importance may be forthcoming at any moment from Peking. It was even thought that something might be received yesterday, but this hope was doomed to disappointment. The few cablegrams that were received referred to minor matters and did not touch at all upon conditions in the Chinese capital. It is known that a second effort has been made by our own government to get another message from Mr. Conger and that nearly all of the powers also have resorted to private agencies in their own interest with a like object. The fact has just been developed that one of the late acts of the late Col. Liscumb before his death at Tien-tsin was to undertake the dispatch of a spy to Peking. Gen. Dorward, the British commanding officer at Tien-tsin, also sent out two messengers, and it is believed that the Japanese did the same. Up to date not one of these messengers has returned to Tien-tsin, nor has there been a single word heard from any of them. This fact, however, has not caused the abandonment of hope, and this is true in particular of the message expected from Mr. Conger. Minister Wu is, perhaps, the basis for this hope on our part, and he maintains an unshaken confidence in his original assertion that the news, when it does come, will show that the legationers are alive. The message reported to have come through Missionary Wilder at Chefu is regarded as most promising. Minister Wu had no cablegrams himself yesterday, nor had the state department any directly from China. Nothing further has been heard as to the date set for the beginning of the movement from Tien-tsin toward eking, and it is said here that this is a detail that must be fixed by the military commanders upon the apot.

THREATENS MASSACRE

If International Troops Advance on Peking.

Berlin, July 31.—The Chinese legation in Berlin has received a message from Sheng, director general of railways and telegraphs, saying that he has received a dispatch from Peking announcing that Gen. Tung Fuh Siang threatens to kill all the members of the legation if the international forces advance upon Peking. Evidently the legation is embarrassed by the receipt of this dispatch, as the Chinese minister has not communicated it to the German government. The legation has cabled the viceroy of Nanking requesting him to try and get information as to whether the widow of Baron von Ketteler, the murdered German minister, is still alive.

Massacred Two Thousand.

Tokio, July 31.—It is reported from Shanghai that the boxers attacked the missionaries and native Christians at Pao-tingfu on July 8.—A foreign physician and 2,000 convert were massacred The Chinese general, Lo Ho Keh, is now marching on Peking. He ordered his troops to exterminate all Christians. Already one Preneh priest and 2,000 to 3,000 natives have been slaughtered.

DAMAGED BY STORM

WORST TORNADO IN THE HISTORY OF THE RED RIVER VALLEY.

Path of Storm Through Traill County Is Five Miles Wide and Thirty-Four Miles Long, and the Loss Is Total—House Demolished Near Caledonia, Killing a Boy—City Hall and Presbyterian Church at Caledonia Demolished and Nearly Every Building in Town Wrecked.

Hillsboro, N. D., July 31.—The tornado that passed north of Hillsboro yesterday evening was one of the worst ever experienced in the Red river valley. The storm passed a few miles west of Mayville and Portland, near the boundary line between teele and Traill counties, and went straight east entirely through Traill county and across the Red river into Minnesota, where it split, one part going east into Beltrami county and the other veering south to Halsted. The path of the storm through Traill county was five miles wide and thirty-four miles long, and the loss is total, not only all the grain, but all garden vegetables. Three miles north of Caledonia the storm struck the house of Thomas Everson, totally demolishing it and killing the seven-year-old son. The escape of the other members of the family was fairly miraculous, some of them being carried forty rods through the air by the wind, but without injury.

At Caledonia the city hall and Presbyterian church were demolished and nearly every building in the city badly wrecked. Four miles north of here the Synod church was completely destroyed. The damage to stock is quite heavy. It is expected that full reports from Traill county will show a loss of property grater than ever has been known in the state from a similar cause. Horses and cattle in pastures were crazed by the pelting of the hailstones, many of which were as large as a man's fist. The hailstones lay on the ground three or four inches deep after the storm.

Passengers Get a Scare.

Jamestown, N. D., July 31. — The Jamestown & Northern passenger train was a sorry looking sight when it arrived Saturday night from the north. The train passed through a hailstorm when between Cheyenne and New Rockford, and the passengers and train crew admit that it was the most farful storm they had ever witnessed. Every window except two on the west side of the coaches was broken and one window on the side facing east was smashed. The amount of damage to property and crops is reported to have been very large. The loss to the railroad company is considerable. Reports from Brinsmede, on the Jamestown & Northern, are to the effect that a great amount of damage was done to crops, and especially flax, in that vicinity, as well as to property.

-o-

Michigan City, July 31. — Hail destroyed what grain was left on several hundred acres five miles south of this place. It rained hard here for about fifteen minutes.

MADE RICHER BY HIS HEN.

Farmer Sells Wheat at Higher Figure Because He Waited.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 31.—Because one of his hens selected a bin containing about 800 bushels of wheat as the place to hatch out a brood of young chickens, a Clay county farmer is $100 richer than he otherwise would have been. The farmer upon deciding to market his surplus wheat which he had carried over from last season, proceeded to his granary, where he found that the hen had taken possession. He decided not to disturb the hen, but to wait until the young chickens were hatched. In the meantime the price of wheat advanced until the farmer discovered he had gained over $100 by allowing the hen to "set it out."

FOR BAIT IN A TIGER TRAP

At the Mercy of a Band of Semi Savages

FIERCE INDIAN NATIVES

Saved by a Little Girl—Shut Up in a Trap as Bait for the Fiercest and Strongest of All Wild Beasts—An English Officer's Story.

A tiger story is the unfailing resource of the officers of the British army on the long ocean voyage they must regularly make between London and Calcutta. It is a rare treat to be a listener with some grizzled veteran during the enforced leisure of this homeward journey, holding a smoking room audience spellbound with a tale of adventure.

Here is one told by Sir Arthur H[illegible] not long ago before a party of interested listeners. A tall, thin, soldierly figure, with a face darkened by close application of the razor, he [illegible] the giant of the group:

"It happened in Birmania," he began, "between Prome and Rangoon. The country was ravaged at that time by the depredatory hands of Nung Gung Gee, the fiercest native chief we ever had to contend with. I headed a scouting party, and, being overtaken by night at some distance from camp, we lighted fires and lay down to sleep. Some hours later I felt myself lifted bodily from the ground. I had been bound and gagged, and in a short time was a prisoner in the stronghold of Gung himself.

"The next morning they brought me before Gung. The moment he saw me he leered hideously.

"'At last,' he said, 'here is one of those English who are invading our country and would reduce us to slavery.'

"Gung's followers now blindfolded me. I was thus forced some five miles through the jungle and beaten with sticks all the way. Finally they came to a halt. The bandage was removed from my eyes. Growing accustomed to the light I discovered a tiger trap ahead. I did not imediately comprehend the purpose of my captors. But my uncertainty did not last long.

"The tiger trap was constructed of bamboo. One section of it was cut off from the rest by a network of bamboo rods. This formed the receptacle for the bait. The bait was myself. They stripped me of my clothing, thrust me in and bound me with thongs. Then they made off.

"I did not feel very uneasy at first. For two hours I worked for freedom, but in the end I was forced to admit the hopelessness of the task. Insects alighted on my skin and bit the flesh raw. The sun beat down on my head and into my eyes. I grew faint. Suddenly it occurred to me that a tiger might appear at any moment. However, there was some hope, although the hope was slender. A little native girl had, at the risk of her life, given me a drink of water the day before. This was at a spot near Gung's camp. I bade her hurry off and apprise Captain D'Oyley of my peril. But as the hours wore on I grew despondent. Would the little girl have understood?

"My reflections were interrupted by a light footfall. It was for all the world like that of a timid child. When the sound first reached my ears no suspicion of tigers entered my head Suddenly a gorgeous shoulder flashed its stripes through the bamboo. One of the largest tigers I had ever seen—and I had seen many—confronted me.

"It flashed across my mind that this might not be a man-eating tiger. In that event, it would sniff about the trap and do me no harm. One gigantic paw was raised against the outer door of the trap. The door lifted and fell. The tiger was caught. Only a bamboo paling separated us. The bulky mass advanced toward me. Then the animal stood perfectly motionless.

"My whole body had turned cold, except where the insects left their stings. These raw spots glowed like many tiny coals. I stared straight into the tiger's face, not daring to wink an eyelid. I felt that the first movement would come from the enemy. It did. With a roar, the tiger dashed her whole weight against the bamboo rods. The great claws were thrust through and barely reached me. The tips of them scratched three long streaks in my side. A red tongue was stretched greedily through the bars. There was no doubt now. This was a man-eating tiger.

"The peril gave me inconceivable strength. I tried to burst my bonds. But I suddenly recollected that bursting my bonds would do me little good. I was in a trap, like my enemy. In another moment my portion of the trap would be invaded.

"Suddenly I saw a glimmer of lights. A confused sound of voices reached me. They were coming nearer. I heard my name pronounced. They were calling me. My voice refused to issue from my throat. But I knew in that instant that the little girl had given the alarm. I am glad to recall that my first impulse was one of gratitude to her.

"My rescuers dared not shoot the tigress. Gung was in the neighborhood. His hands would have massacred our little company in a moment. It was necessary to attack the tigress with bayonets. It seemed every instant that the trap would give way under the strain of the leaps of the beast. It took almost an hour to effect my rescue. It is strange that the tigress harassed on all sides did not turn and kill me with a stroke of its paw. But the animal lost blood from a hundred wounds. It succumbed. They saved me."

THE MILLIONAIRE COLONY.

Croesuses That Have Recently Gone to New York to Live.

THE LATEST ADDITION.

William A. Clark, of Montana, Is the Reputed Possessor of Two Hundred Million—What He Proposes to Lay Out on His New Mansion.

Five hundred million is the round sum by which New York's fashionable society has been enriched by ten new comers within the last five seasons.

From the Pacific coast, from the northwest, from the middle west and the middle states these Croesuses have come to add their wealth to the already enormous riches of the millionaire Fifth avenue colony.

They are spending money there in a manner that dazzles even the Vanderbilts and Astors, who have heretofore led the way in lavish outlays.

Palaces costing one, two and ten million dollars each, million-dollar yachts, racing stables worth hundreds of thousands, pictures, for which scores of thousands each are paid, jewels beyond computation, mark the advent of these newly-arrived multi-millionaires.

Probably the most sensational entrance into New York's Fifth avenue coterie is that of Senator William A. Clark, of Montana, the reputed possessor of over two hundred millions.

He is credited with saying that he would spend ten millions dollars on a house and its furnishings, that should be the finest in New York.

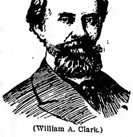
A balustrade of gold and a silver staircase made from metal taken from his own mines, pillars and wainscotings and friezes of costly marbles, wall paintings done by famous masters from abroad, to rival the works of art in the palaces of Roman Emperors and Pompeiian nobles, and pictures and tapestries costing fortunes each. This is how it is said Senator Clark proposes to lay out ten million dollars on his new mansion. At present only the foundations are being laid at the corner of Fifth avenue and Seventy-seventh street.

When Senator Clark was in Paris last spring he purchased a stained glass window for his house from the Countess de Jauze for $30,000. This window, which is very old, shows historic Greek figures, and is considered the most beautiful in France.

Mr. Clark also sat for a portrait, which is to adorn his library. Besnard, the artist, received $25,000. The Senator offered Prince Murat $300,000 for the Louis XV. Gobelin tapestries, which the Prince refused.

The multi-millionaire then contented himself with buying a Turner picture for $20,000, and gave corresponding prices for works by Dupret, Corot, Diaz, Rousseau, Jongkind, Daumer, Bouden, Lepine and other masters. He also began negotiations in England for the tapestries of the royal suite belonging to the Earl of Coventry, which cost originally $350,000.

Senator Clark at the same time bought the finest specimens of furniture he could find belonging to the period of Louis Quatorze, Louis Quinze, Louis Seize and the Empire.



(William A. Clark.)

Previous to this it will be remembered that he bought Fortuny's "Choice of a Model" at a New York auction sale for $42,000.

From this it may be imagined what the art treasures will be which will adorn Senator Clark's Fifth avenue house, and how he will spend $10,000,000 upon it.

The man who can spend money like this has a copper mine, the United Verde, in Arizona, that yields him a million dollars a month clear profit, silver, gold and copper mines in Montana that give him an equal amount, besides cattle ranges, square miles in extent, on the northwestern plains, and sugar, tobacco and coffee plantations in Mexico.

He has refineries and smelters from Montana to the tropics in Western America. He is the largest individual owner of mines and smelters in the world.

Senator Clark's wife died seven years ago. He has five children, but is especially fond of his daughter, Katherine. It is said she will be installed as mistress in his New York palace.

Told on Her Return From New York.

A Kansas City woman, whose hair is gray, went to New York recently and took a ride on a trolley car. Both of the side seats of the car were crowded with men. As she stood there, hanging to strap and swinging and jerking with the motion of the car, she observed that all of the men seemed to be entirely hidden behind their newspapers. She thought, as she stood there, that in Kansas City men often rise to give their seats to women. The difference was painful to contemplate. Finally a negro, near the other end of the car, stood up and said:

"Take this seat, lady."

"No," answered the Kansas City woman, with awful distinctness. "I will not take the seat of the only gentleman in the car."

The newspapers dropped suddenly, and six men jumped to their feet. Apparently they had only just seen the gray-haired woman. And she took her choice of seats.—Kansas City Star.

SHE HAS STARTLED SOCIETY

Mrs. Jack Gardner's Extraordinary Souvenir.

BUYS THE PITTI PALACE

And Will Have the Whole Thing, Pictures and All, Shipped to Boston—How She Gives Freshness and Aplomb to Society at the Hub.

Mrs. "Jack" Gardner, Boston's noted society leader, brings back from Europe a most extraordinary souvenir.

It is a set of plans and photographs of an Italian palace, which she is going to have transported across the Mediterranean and Atlantic and set up in Boston with all its art treasures as a memorial to her late husband.

This quite outdoes all of Mrs. "Jack's" past performances with which this former New York girl, Isabel Stewart, has been surprising conventional Boston for nearly a score of years.

Last December her multimillionaire husband, Mr. John Lowell Gardner, of Boston, died, leaving all his millions to his wife.

She promptly went into the most fashionable mourning, but she really showed her deep sorrow by refraining from doing anything startling for nearly a year.

She went to Europe last June and sought seclusion by hiring a Venetian palace for the season. It was there that she formed the plan of buying an Italian palace, rich in art treasures of classic design and transplanting it to her American home.

The Pitti Palace, designed by the famous architect, Brunelleschi, is one of the best types of a Florentine palace, such as Mrs. Gardner has purchased. It was built during the Republic, in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. This palace was begun about the year 1440 for Luca Pitti, the head of one of the richest and most powerful political families of Florence.

(Mrs. Jack Gardner.)

The building progressed for twenty-six years in the slow and substantial way in which palaces were then constructed. At that time, in 1466, Luca Pitti's political conspiracy failed against the still more powerful house of the Medici, and Pitti's downfall caused his unfinished palace to fall ultimately into the hands of his rival.

Building operations were again begun, but the great structure was not finished until 1549, or 100 years after it was begun.

It is a Florentine palace of that age of splendor that Mrs. Gardner is going to bring to America and set up in Boston. The magnitude of the work may be imagined when it is considered that it is made of huge blocks of stone weighing over a ton each. They are chiselled only at the edges so as to give an increased effect of ruggedness and vastness. All these pieces will have to be numbered as they are taken down so that they may be set up in the same relative position as they now occupy.

There will be many ship loads of the walls and marbles used in the interior decorations. Besides this, the paintings, statuary and furnishings will have to be packed most carefully and brought over in passenger steamships in the care of attendants.

The hall on the ground floor of Mrs. Gardner's palace will be devoted to paintings and statuary. Many of these works of art will be brought from Italy. But Mrs. Gardner will also add now in her Boston home.
to this collection many choice pieces

The private museum of art she will throw open to the public. Her own private apartments will be on the upper floors.

The location which Mrs. Gardner has selected for this palace and museum combined is in Boston's fashionable Back Bay district. It will front on the Fens, the park near the Charles River. This will show off the classic proportions of the building to the greatest advantage.

Mrs. Gardner already has three splendid homes in Massachusetts. Her town house is in Beacon street, Boston, the traditional home of the Hub's aristocrats. She has another mansion on a large estate in the adjoining suburb of Brookline, while her country summer home is at Beverly.

Nearly every celebrity that has visited Boston for over a dozen years has come under the spell of this fascinating woman and become a figure at her "afternoons."

She has received the title of "Mrs. Leo Hunter, of America," on account of her fondness for social lions.

But these were only the milder phases of Mrs. Gardner's eccentricities. She startled all grades of Boston society by hiring a box to see Corbett box.

She started the society woman fad of feeling Sandow's muscles.

She went to the summer "Pop" concerts and drank beer in public.

She borrowed a lion from the Boston Zoo and paraded it before the public.

She mopped up the steps of a fashionable church on her knees as a penance during Lent.

It was by doing such things that Mrs. "Jack" has succeeded in giving a certain freshness and variety to Boston society.

To cap the climax of this long list of achievements needed some great deed, great even for Mrs. Gardner, and she has done it.

THE WONGIN CAMP.

The Wongin Is the Woods Store That Lumber Camps Maintain.

The favorite story that the satirists of the woods tell of the typical Maine wongin camp is the story of Pete the P 1 They say that Pete couldn't figger and couldn't write, and that when he came to settle at the wongin for what he had bought during the winter he found an array of charges against him that fairly paralyzed his senses.

Pete didn't think of disputing the charges—for they were down in those mythical, puzzling "figures"—and he had a great fear and respect for figures.

"Of course, all I know about it," said the wily keeper of the wongin, "is what my figures say. You aren't going to dispute the figures, are you?"

"Ah wasn't thinkin' o' that," said Pete, "but Ah was a-thinkin' that there was some o' the things ye have got down there that I never had."

"What, for instance?" asked the wongin keeper, fiercely.

"Wol," said Pete, "read it over again."

"There—there, hol' on there," cried the woodsman at length. "I never had three pairs o' stockin's las' winter—never had 'em."

"Well, let's see what the figgers say," rejoined the wongin keeper. "These figgers hadn't ought to lie. Now, there was the pair you had."

"Yis."

"And the pair you didn't have."

"Yis."

"And the pair you ought to have had."

"Yis."

"Well, Great Scott, man, are you so dense as not to be able to see that three ones make three—that makes three pairs of stockings by the figgers. I know that you never went to school, but any man ought to be able to understand that."

"Woi," said Pete, scratching his head, "I suppose it must be so if the figgers have it that way—but blame me, this settlin' by figgers is a curis thing—a blame curis thing."—Lewiston, Me., Journal.

The Singing Pupil.

"How do you think I am coming along in my singing?"

"Howling success."

Crushing Out Ambition.

"You told me you had sent an article to the magazine. Was it published?"

"No."

"Did the publishers return it?"

"They did not."

"Then you didn't send stamps for return postage."

"Yes, I did. They returned the stamps. They said the manuscript was not worth returning."

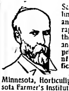
"Why don't you sue them for it?"

"That's what they want me to do. They would like to have it read in court."—Chicago Tribune.

One Ingredient.

"Every day is ground hog day with me," mused the youth who acted as chief operator of the sausage mill.—Baltimore American.

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.



Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it; and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

FORFEITED TAX LAW TEST CASE.

Judge Cary, of Mankato, has rendered a decision which is the first to effect the forfeited tax law passed by the last legislature. In the case decided Hiram B. Cole brought action against. Leo S. Lamm to determine adverse claims to a lot in Mankato. The plaintiff holds the patent title and the defendant based his claims on a tax title acquired at the recent sale. The court found that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of the property, and that the defendant has a lein to the amount of taxes, penalties and interest assessed against the land. The court does not believe that he is entitled to a lien for the amount paid at the sale, he having paid several times the amount of the taxes, etc. The court also held that certain defects were not sufficient to defeat the title, and that the law itself is invalid as far as it attempts to divest the original owner of the right to a notice of expiration of redemption provided for by the law in force when the original taxes were sold to the state. An appeal has been taken in the case.

THE POPULISTS.

The convention is over. The Populists of Red Lake County have placed their ticket in the field, and whether it is a strong one or a weak one, will be told by the ballots in November. Several incidents stand out strongly—the final parting of the Populists and Democrats, the victory of Samuel Gibeau over the combine, the turning down of K. M. Hansen, and the defeat of Judge Knight. Mr. Knight's defeat is in no way personal, and is owing solely to the fact that the office of judge of probate was one of the last to be reached, and before it was reached, Red Lake Falls was represented on the ticket by Jeffers, Moran, and Grady, leaving nothing for St. Hilaire and Thief River Falls but this and a minor office. The convention, after it had gone this far felt that it would be suicidal to put another Red Lake Falls man on the ticket, and the plum went to Johnson, of St. Hilaire. After the convention the Democrats, who asked for the attorneyship, and were turned down, adjourned to the city hall, and decided to put up a full ticket on August 30th.

If Red Lake County is to have an exhibit at the State Fair, it is high time to act. Our county has a crop of grain and grasses, vegetables and game that is second to none in the state, and this year of drouth the fact is all the more creditable, and would be the greater advertisement.

Last week's Courier contained a fair example of the style of argument of that sheet, in the item headed "The Gazette Slops Over." Stripped of its personal abose and vindictiveness, there is nothing in it; a fair specimen and a fitting closing fling in the campaign that had preceded it.

Harvest is early this year, the cutting of wheat having commenced a week ago, in patches, and today it is general. We have seen samples of grain, exhibited by C. F. Johnson, of the Red Lake Falls Milling Company, taken from Fred Schmidt's farm north of the city, which is pronounced by experts as perfect milling wheat. The heads have filled clear to the top, with fine, round, plump berries, and this will ensure a better grade than has been anticipated. This is the general crop condition throughout Red Lake County.

Vic's Letter.

Tarloc, P. I., June 20, 1900.

Friend Phil:

I will take a moment to drop you a few lines to let you know that we are not all drowned yet, although we did have to swim during our last expedition.

On the 15th or June Gen. Macobolers, whom we have been looking for so long, came out of his hiding place and sent a mounted messenger into Tarloc to let the Americans know of his intention to surrender and on what terms. Gen. Macobolers, it appears, was to blame and accountable for the murder of two American prisoners. He would surrender on the terms that he should not be held accountable for the murders, and his term were accepted.

Of course L troop, 4th cavalry, was not left behind when the surrender took place, and partook of the honor.

It started to rain about a week and a half ago and now the country is flooded. I was on a detail to go to "La Paz," a little town about 14 miles from Tarloc, to bring mail to company F, of the 9th Infantry, which is commanded by Lieut. Naylor, formerly of Co. L. 14, Minnesota Vol., as second lieutenant.

We had a train of three pack mules. I was detailed as packer and ten of us took two days' rations, leaving on the morning of June 17. We traveled for three miles in fully three feet of water without once seeing land. The cinch on my saddle broke when we were about half way across this pond, and I was obliged to walk, hanging to the mane of my horse and to my saddle, for over a mile before I could strike shallow enough water to fix my saddle. The water was almost always even with the sides of my horse and he had to swim occasionally. After we got through this pond we had two rivers left yet to swim with our horses, and when we were between the rivers we met Lieut. Naylor, who crossed the other river and was coming to meet us with a detachment of his company, who were good swimmers. But his aid was not needed, as we swam the river, remaining mounted on our horses and not taking the pack off the mules. We returned on the 18th with very good luck, and all having had a good deal of experience with water and bad roads. This was the worst trip that I have ever taken and feel assured that nowhere but in the Philippines can a person take a trip like this.

The transport Lozon, the first part of the month, came in with 822 sacks of mail, the largest mail since we have been on the Island, and, of course, I got several Gazettes.

The ninth infantry, excepting Co. F., that is in this town. will go to Manilla to-night on train, and it is rumored that they are going to China. The Marines have already gone and the 6th artillary and 20th Infantry are under orders. Our company is unanimous in wishing to go. "Vic."

The following letter was received by Benj. Dolbeck, of Louisville, last week:

Tarloc, P. I., June 2, 1900.

Dear Uncle:

Your letter of March 20 is at hand and I endeavor to answer it right away.

I am glad to hear that you are all in good health. As for myself I was a little under the weather a couple of weeks in May but am now on duty again. We had been at Bayambong, near the northern end of the island, but on the 27th of May we came into this town. It was at one time the insurgent's stronghold. Our duty here is of the hardest kind. On the 28th of May two companies of rebels, or ladrones, as we call them, marched up to the provost marshal of this town, in four columns, and the officer in charge said in broken English, as he saluted, "Sir, we have marched in and stacked arms, and I, as a captain in the insurgents' forces, desire to surrender my men and arms in the same place that I took up arms against the United States." They had with them an American renegade, or in other words a deserter. He belonged to K troop, of the 4th Cavalry and claims to have been captured, but it seems that that is a false story, as he was a prisoner in the American's hands at the time he left. Under penalty of death he signed a paper, promising never to bear allegiance to the U. S. again, so he says, and he was given a commission as Lieutenant. It is also claimed by some of the ladrones that he was the man who killed two Americans, that at the time were held prisoners. They were sick and could not travel and he shot them. His case is very black I think and every man swears vengeance to the man who ruined the reputation of their regiment.

Well uncle I will close my letter by wishing you good bye.

Your nephew,
Victor Patnaude.

A SAD CASE.

MRS. JULIUS BERG DRIVEN TO INSANITY BY ABUSE BY HER HUSBAND.

COMMITTED TO THE ASYLUM AT FERGUS FALLS BY JUDGE KNIGHT.

One of the saddest cases ever witnessed is that of Mrs. Julius Berg, who was brought to town Sunday by Messrs. Callahan and King, a raving maniac, bare-foot and with scarcely sufficient clothing to cover her emaciated body. Her story is that of a life of misery. Married to Berg some seventeen years ago, she endured abuse and persecution until tired nature could no longer endure the strain. The story is told how some years ago she was compelled to herd cattle for a livelihood, having as many as 500 head in charge at one time, while her worthless husband made the collections, squandering the money for drink, and gave her scarcely sufficient to subsist on. She left him at different times but always went back to him. For the past two months the family have been living on the Phil Ryan farm near Wylie, which they had purchased on crop payments. On the 23d she came to the city to take action with a view to securing a divorce, and had the preliminary papers drawn up. When her husband heard of this he became enraged and it is said chased her for several miles with a shot gun. She went to the Callahan home where she soon developed into a raving maniac, and was brought to the city Sunday. All afternoon she raved, and her shrieks could be heard all about the city, as the window of her room at Hotel Wilmes was open. She kept this up all night and all the next day until the Great Northern pulled out at 3:30 and did not take any nourishment during this time, so that before she left she was so weak as to be unable to walk. Judge Knight appointed Joseph Belair to escort her to Fergus Falls, and Mrs. Belair accompanied them.

Agitates the Farmers' Organization.

To the Public and the Farmers in Particular:

Since the appearance of a communication written by me, and published on June 7, last, in the local newspapers, and copied by a great many large and influential newspapers, "Object, to make 75c the minimum price for good, marketable, wheat," I have received a large number of letters from parties from this and other states, all expressing themselves as most enthusiastic in favor of a Farmers' Organization, and they all agree that such an organization ought to be perfected at once.

I have learned that the time is fast approaching when such an organization will be an accomplished fact. I also have learned that there are several organizations chartered and some for two or three years past, whose aim and plan is as follows:

These promotors want the farmers to own all their own elevators, their own creameries, their own cheese factories, and the farmers to ship all their farm produce to a few favored commission houses. These promotors are to select for the farmers a co-operative store at each place, where the farmers shall do all their buying and selling, in the necessaries of life. They want to furnish the farmers all kinds of farm machinery, binding twine, in short the promotors would finally buy and sell the farmers themselves.

This is exactly the old co-operative Farmers' Alliance plan, on which they have hedged for the past ten years, and never accomplished anything. The farmers are subjected, too much, to slavery now, but this co-operative business would enslave them still more, and no intelligent farmer believes in it. Hence this co-operative organization has never succeeded.

I am opposed to this plan. My plan of organization is very simple and at the same time effective, and its only object is to make 75c the minimum price for good, marketable wheat. My plan is to leave the farmer to the open market, to do his own buying and selling where he pleases. It is a serious and rediculous custom in vogue at present, which needs to be remedied. The elevator man dictates the price of wheat to suit himself. To the farmers, the producers, belongs the unquestionable right to dictate the minimum price of wheat which price shall not be less than the cost of production.

Yours respectfully,
P. E. Pirath.

We Lose a Good Teacher.

The following letter from Miss VanValkenburg will be of interest to our readers:

Mr. P. A. Kaufer,
Red Lake Falls, Minn.

It is with regret that I write that I shall not be in Red Lake Falls next year. I have a fine opportunity to spend the coming year in study at the Universities of Rome and Athens in company with Prof. Kelsey, the head of the Latin department of the University of Michigan, and a party of University of Michigan graduates. We sail from New York the twenty fifth of August.

I became very strongly attached to my pupils and many friends in Red Lake Falls, and hope at least to visit them at some future time

The Higher Life.

Prof. W. J. Johnson, field secretary and professor of pedagogics in Macalester College, St. Paul, was in the city Monday looking up prospective pupils for the college. While here he took occasion to deliver a lecture on "Higher Life" at the Presbyterian church, which is said by those who were fortunate enough to hear it, to have been a very forcible, instructive and entertaining talk. Personally, Prof. Johnson is a man whom it is a pleasure to meet. He has a large acquaintance in this district as well as in other parts of the state and is very popular with all. It is likely that he will secure several students from this city for his college.

Moral—Always go to Chicago via the Northwestern Line. The dining car service is unexcelled.

HUMBERT IS SHOT

ITALY'S MONARCH FOULLY ASSASSINATED.

An Anarchist Fires Three Shots, One of Which Pierces the King's Heart, Resulting in His Death in About an Hour — Cheers of the Multitude Were Ringing in King Humbert's Ears When He Was Foully Struck Down — Assassin Was With Great Difficulty Saved From the Fury of the Populace.

Monza, Italy, July 31—King Humbert was assassinated here yesterday. He was shot by an anarchist named Angelo Bressi at 10:45 and died at 11:30. The assassin was immediately arrested and cynically avowed his crime. He was with great difficulty saved from the fury of the populace which was wrought up to a terrible frenzy of excitement over the dastardly crime. The murderer gave his name as Angelo Bressi, describing himself as of Prato, in Tuscany.

The king had been attending a distribution of prizes in connection with a gymnastic competition. He had just entered his carriage with his aide-de-camp and the cheers of the crowd when he was struck by three revolver shots fired in quick succession. He fell back and expired in a few minutes.

Rome, July 31.—The news of the terrible event did not arrive here until after midnight. Sig. Saracco, the premier, immediately summoned a meeting of the cabinet and the ministers will start at the earliest possible moment for Monza. The Prince and Princess of Naples are on board the Yela, yachting in the Levant.

RESULTED IN A FIASCO.

Amnesty Celebration at Manila Was Premature.

Manila, July 31.—Edited by the Censor—The two days' fiesta in Manila, organized by Senor Paterno and his political followers to commemorate the amnesty, resulted in a fiasco. The people were passive and unenthusiastic. Failing to perceive any tangible, effective results of amnesty they say they can see no reasons for celebrating.

Judge Taft and his colleagues of the commission felt constrained to decline to attend the banquet as they had been informed that the speeches would favor independence, under American protection, and they could not passively lend their acquiescence by being present. Senor Paterno, foreseeing the suspension of the banquet without the Americans, frantically appealed to them to attend, promising that there should be no speeches.

The provost precautions were extreme. The guards were doubled both days and the authorities forbade the display of Filipino flags and of pictures of President McKinley and Aguinaldo fraternally framed. The fiesta is generally considered to have been premature and unfortunate.

During last week's scouting ten Americans were killed and fourteen wounded. One hundred and eighty Filipinos were killed and sixty taken prisoners. Forty insurgent rifles were captured.

POOR GIRL GETS MILLIONS.

Australian Aunt of Miss Maggie Carmody of Toledo Gives Her Money, Stocks and Bonds.

Toledo, Ohio, July 31.—Miss Maggie Carmody, the Toledo heiress to a large fortune in Australia, is on her way to New York to meet her aunt, Mrs. C. B. F. Bradbury of Melbourne, Australia. The two will sail for Paris to remain a few weeks, after which they will go to Australia. Miss Carmody is a poor girl, and has lived alone for some time. Her aunt has made over to her $2,000,000 in money, stocks and bonds, and $8,000,000 more will go to Miss Carmody on her aunt's death.

EMPRESS FREDERICK IS ILL.

Mother of Emperor William of Germany Said to Be Near Death at Castle Near Hamburg.

London, July 31.—Empress Frederick of Germany is mortally ill with an internal complaint. She is at the castle of Cronberg, near Hamburg. The empress has arranged to pass the autumn at White Lodge, Richmond Park, London, which was given to her by Queen Victoria after the death of the duke of Teck. But it is feared there would be family dissensions if she came to England while ill. The duke of Saxe-Coburg is also seriously ill with Bright's disease.

ESTES G. RATHBONE ARRESTED.

Late Director General of Posts in Cuba Charged With Several Unlawful Acts.

Havana, July 31.—Estes G. Rathbone, recently director general of posts in Cuba, was arrested Saturday on four charges. These allege the unlawful drawing of two orders for $500 each, paying his private coachman and gardener from the postal funds, and drawing per diem allowance when not entitled to do so. Mr. Rathbone was held in bonds of $25,000.

WAR COUNCIL REORGANIZED.

President Loubet Signs Decrees Which Also Reform Certain Departments.

Paris, July 30.—President Loubet, on a proposition from the minister of war, has just signed a series of important decrees, reforming and reorganizing the superior council of war and certain departments of the war office.

Quiet in New Orleans.

New Orleans, July 31.—The city is very quiet and most of the precautionary measures have been dispensed with. Nearly all of the 1,500 militiamen have been relieved, a detachment of twenty men being left at the parish prison. Last evening the citizens' police disbanded, fifty being detained as an emergency squad.

Amenial Loyothets, a Greek, died at St. Mary's hospital, La Salle, Ill., of injuries received by being run over by the cars at Rutland.

THE VERY YOUNG MAN.

His Plaid Stockings and Big Money Make Him Conspicuous.

He boarded the Woodward avenue car at Crafoit avenue, where there was already a crowd of thirty or thirty-five inside. He squeezed into a seat and a woman holding a child partially oozed out at the end by the door. A dozen people glared at the very young man. He hitched up his trousers four inches above his shoe tops and regaled the other passengers with a sight of his plaid silk hose. Every one knew the very young man has received those "socks" for christmas, but he wasn't aware that they knew it. Atop the very young man's head rested a stiff hat with a crown so low that the entire apparatus looked like a fried egg, done brown on one side.

The young man's clothes were cut very large. He wore no overcoat. There were creases in his sleeves and his necktie was plaid, like the hose. He wore besides these things a vacuous smile of imbecility, such as is often seen on the well-bred scion of a noble European home. Such was he in looks.

By and by the conductor opened the back door of the car and let in about a ton of winter weather and himself. He closed the door after him and the passengers shivered. The very young man smiled as vacuously as ever, and gave his trousers another hitch. Shortly the passengers felt they would be able to tell the color of the elastics holding those stockings up. "Fares," yelled the bold conductor, extending a grim paw here and there. The very young man reached into the lower right-hand pocket of a vocal waistcoat of stripes and checks and pulled out a rolled up bill. This he handed to the conductor, first unrolling it, so that the people alongside could see that it was a five.

"Smallest you got?" growled the conductor.

"Yes, smallest," smiled the very young man. The conductor knew he lied, but the very young man didn't know what the conductor knew. The latter rolled up the bill again and poked it into his pocket, then he reached into an inner compartment beneath his overcoat and pulled out a double handful of nickels and dimes. These he stacked like the dealer of a faro game. Unloading a pile on the youth he said, "That's one dollar." Before the very young man could count the coins another was dumped upon with he words, "There's another dollar." Somebody snickered. The vacuous smile left the countenance of the very young man and he reddened like unto a beet. "There's another dollar. That makes three."

The man opposite laughed outright. The red on the very young man's face deepened. He no longer counted. "That's four," and another dump came. "Then here's the rest," and still another handful of nickels and pennies was unloaded on the youth.

Laughter in the car was general. The youth, weighed down with wealth, made for the door and swung from the car at Edmund Place, even if he did live on Alexandrine.

And the only regret of the other passengers was that they had not seen the color of the elastics that held up the plaid hose.—Detroit Free Press.

BLUFF WON THE DAY.

A Yankee Tourist Didn't Propose to Be Left Out in the Cold.

"Here at home bluff doesn't count for much," said the globe trotter, "but I'm telling you that a good stiff bluff, with a cheeky American behind it, is worth a lot of money in Europe. When I got around to Nice last year the best hotels were crowded and I had to take up with a small room. On the same floor was a German who was occupying a suite, though not spending much money or putting on any style. One day there was a great row. The landlord had asked him as a particular favor to vacate for a newcomer, and, of course, the man didn't propose to be turned out. The landlord coaxed and argued, and the German growled and muttered, and I followed them down to the office to see how it would come out. At the desk was an American I had run across in Venice—a buyer for a Chicago dry goods house. When the landlord and German began to gabble in chorus the buyer pulled a bank check from his pocket and reached for a pen, and said:

"All this talk is of no use. I want rooms here. I will buy the hotel and suite. Sir, what is your cash price for this hotel?"

"'You would buy this hotel!' exclaimed the landlord, as he threw up his hands in surprise.

"'Grounds and all, and I want it to-day. How much—a million—three or four? And what name shall I fill in on the check?'

"Say, now," laughed the tourist, "but you ought to have seen that thing work! The German had determined to be ugly about it, but when he humped up against a man who had as soon pay four millions as one for what he fancied, he felt awed and humbled and ready to quit. The landlord figured that to turn away such a Croesus would ruin his house, and it wasn't half an hour before the bluffer was installed in the suite and the German was chucked away into a dog hole on the top floor; and that wasn't all, mind you. When they sent the buyer a bill based on his supposed millions he got up and threatened to buy up the town and start six soap factories to running, and they cut every item in two and begged his pardon to boot. I don't believe that chap had $1,000 to his name, but he just walked over everything and everybody for two weeks, and it was current gossip that he owned the whole of Chicago and a good share of St. Louis and Cincinnati. Nothing but a cold bluff, which wouldn't have taken him into an American dance hall as a deadhead, but it was equal to a letter of credit for $1,000,000 over there."—Seattle Times.

Honey Stopped the Clock.

A church clock at Harborne, near Birmingham, England, was found to have stopped on account of bees swarming in it and filling the works with honey. It took two days to get the honey out. Another Yorkshire clock was stopped by a bird, which made a practice of roosting on one of the hands.

TWO BAD MEN.

They Settled Their Quarrel by Shooting at a Target Instead.

Jim Allison, Wyatt Earp and Bat Masterson recently quarreled over a game of cards in John Brennan's saloon on West Madison street. Their dispute was settled by the use of revolvers, and yet without bloodshed. Twenty years ago a row among these three men would have been followed by a list of dead and wounded longer than that recently telegraphed from Frankfort, Ky., where the former congressman used his pistol. But civilization has had its influence upon even the men of the west who made a record as sure shots, and the lie was passed without bloodshed. The game was hearts—only for the drinks—and Allison had led a diamond. Earp played a heart on the trick, and was accused of making a misplay.

"You lie!" exclaimed Allison.

In a second two hands reached for revolvers.

"Hold on, boys!" shouted Masterson. "This ain't Hassiampo Creek. We're not in a Prescott gambling house. If you want to shoot, I'll show you how to do it. If you win, Earp, Allison will have to apologize. If you win, Jim, Earp must acknowledge he's a liar."

The revolvers were not drawn. When Bat Masterson says a thing it generally goes. He filled thirty or forty graves when he was marshall of Dodge City, Kan., and both Earp and Allison were his assistants at the time. They had fought all over the Southwest with him, and they knew that he was prepared to back up any assertion that he made.

Accordingly, when Masterson led the way out of the saloon, Earp and Allison meekly followed him.

"I'm going to let you shoot," remarked the former marshall, as he turned into a shooting gallery.

The figure of a man with a bull's eye marked where his heart ought to have been was swinging lazily to and fro in the foreground. Imitation ducks were flying through the air, and targets of all kinds were presented to view.

The keeper of the place handed Allison a rifle and a pistol. They were toys in appearance, and the big frontiersman smiled with disgust as he looked at them.

"Use your own guns, boys," said Masterson. "You can have 20 shots each. Shoot at the tin man. That's better than killing each other. I'll be referee."

Two murderous-looking navy forty-fives were brought out, and Allison fired six shots from his weapon in quick succession. Each shot struck the flying man in the heart, and the faint tingle of a bell was heard as the bullet struck. Then Earp's revolver went into action, and each of its bullets found its desired mark.

Masterson applauded the performance, and seemed to derive the utmost amusement from it.

"This reminds me of old times!" he shouted. "You fellows shot that way when we had the fight with the rustlers down in Tombstone. Remember, Jim, you killed three of 'em in quick succession."

For answer Allison let fly his revolver again, and two or three ducks came dropping down. Earp followed his example. The men were interested in their work now, and the quarrel had been forgotten. They shot at every target in the gallery, and their marksmanship was as good as when their lives depended upon it.

Masterson wore a silk hat. Jim winked at Wyatt, and the two quietly stepped back, leaving Bat gazing at the targets and waiting for the next shot.

"Bang!" went the two revolvers in unison, and Masterson's hat flew off his head with two big bullet holes in it.

"You're acting like a tenderfoot," said Earp, "so we treated you like one. Now, I'll admit that I might have been mistaken in the game of cards."

"Same here," chimed in Allison, "but I guess you're stuck for three bottles of champagne."

The champagne was drunk, and the men continued their card game for an hour or so, and then took the westbound train for Denver. Masterson, Allison and Earp are about the only men left of the crowd that helped cultivate respect for the law in frontier settlements. Accurate shots, quick and fearless, they always fought on the side of law and order. Dodge City, Durango, Tombstone, Tucson, Prescott and Phoenix were all brought in to subjection by them.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Capt. Bosco's Swimming Cats.

"I read a description the other day of the retrieving cat owned by a sportsman on Metaire Ridge," said a planter from the south coast, "and while the case was certainly remarkable, it is completely eclipsed, in my opinion, by a family of swimming cats owned by Capt. Bosco, of Tarpon island. Capt. Bosco is well-known in New Orleans, where he occasionally comes to do some trading, and is immensely popular with the crowd that goes down to the Tarpon Club for periodical outings. He is the kingpin fisherman of Bay Adams, and as quaint and original a character as you could find on the whole coast.

"His swimming cats, about which I started to tell you, belong to a feline tribe that has lived at the captain's place from time out of mind. There are, perhaps, at present a dozen all told, and they have apparently lost every vestage of the natural antipathy of their species for water. They will wade, unhesitatingly, through the shallows on the beach, hunting for small fish, and three or four will actually swim out to nearby luggers to get oysters. Like all cats, they are very fond of that kind of food, and when the captain's lugger comes in from a visit to the beds several of them are certain to jump off the landing and swim to where it lies at anchor. It is very strange to see them come scrambling on board, mewing and shaking themselves and seemingly as indifferent to the wetting as setter puppies.

"How they developed such an extraordinary trait, I don't pretend to say, but it has probably been a matter of gradual evolution. Capt. Bosco don't remember when his cats began to go into the water, but it was many years ago and with each generation the natural aversion must have become fainter and fainter. It wouldn't surprise me if they developed web feet."—N. O. Times.

Your correspondent is in receipt of a letter from Victor Patnaude, who is in the Philippine Islands, which he encloses for publication.

Dennis Lizotte, Arthur Huot and Chas. Huot were among those who went on the excursion to Winnipeg. They returned well pleased and having, so they say, seen the best display of cattle, farm machinery, farm products, etc., they ever set eyes on before.

Our butter maker took a spin to Red Lake Falls on his bicycle last Saturday, returning Sunday. He reports a good time, being royally entertained by his brother butter maker at Red Lake Falls. He also reports having found the creamery in good shape, and everything as neat as a pin, which reflects credit on the Red Lake Falls butter maker.

Chinese are dangerous enemies, for they are treacherous. That's why the Counterfeits of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve are dangerous. They look like DeWitt's, but instead of the all-healing witch hazel they all contain ingredients liable to irritate the skin and cause blood poisoning. For piles, injuries and skin diseases use the original and genuine DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. W. A. Schreiter.

Saved His Life.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with typhoid fever that ran into pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected soon to die of consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it and now am well and strong." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all throat and lung trouble. RUINED BY HAIL.

A STRIP SIX MILES WIDE, ONE HUNDRED LONG, SWEPT BY HAIL.

CROPS RUINED, HORSES KILLED AND HOUSES OVERTURNED.

Saturday forenoon the worst rain and windstorm of the season struck this section, coming from the southwest and travelling in a northeasterly direction. The storm area was many miles wide, but was accompanied by hail in only a limited portion of the strip. No hail fell in this immediate vicinity, but Louisville, Polk Centre, Poplar River, Emardville, as well as River Falls and Sanders suffered. The losses in Polk Centre are said to be very severe, about 50 per cent. North of Wylie, and in a strip between St. Hilaire and Thief River Falls, five miles wide, the loss is said to be total. In the heighth of the storm's fury, inky darkness spread over the earth, to such an extent that work had to be suspended in stores and offices, as it was impossible to read or write even in the best lit rooms.

In Poplar River the Lucier, Pigeon, Champagne, Cyr, Paradis, Noel, Tibear and Payment farms were struck, the damage being considerable. On the latter place, a new residence was blown over, just as Mrs. Payment stepped out. No one was injured. On the Tibear farm, the house was blown down, hay scattered to the winds, and crops damaged to the amount of about $600.

In Polk Centre, Tom Glen was cutting wheat with a binder drawn by three horses, when one horse was struck by lightning and killed, although the animal walked half a mile after being struck. Mr. Glen was uninjured. The Lubitz, Gother, Schirrich, Stabl and Mauer farms sustained considerable damage from hail.

Stock in pastures was terribly tortured by the hailstones, and in many instances their flesh was pounded to a pulp, with blood trickling down their legs.

At Thief River Falls the smoke stack of the mill was struck, the G. N. windmill blown down, and a residence badly damaged by lightning.

The house and outbuildings of John Hendrickson, living near St. Hilaire, were totally destroyed. Mrs. Hendrickson was carried half a mile by the wind and was unconscious when found. The damage to the buildings generally was very heavy in that vicinity.

Near Thief River Falls a barn was blown down containing six horses, one of which was killed. The uncut crops in the path of the storm in Minnesota are a total loss. The storm ruined the remaining crops of a strip from three to six miles wide, extending from beyond Hatton, N. D., to Thief River Falls, a distance of over 100 miles, and spent itself on the Red Lake Indian reservation.

Birthday Party.

Saturday evening Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lemieux gave a birthday party for Adelard Lemieux, on the occasion of his 18th birthday anniversary. Before lunch, progressive cinch was the order of the evening. The ladies' head prize was won by Miss Victoria Paul, and the gentlemens' by Mr. Joseph Fortier.

During lunch, and just at midnight, many mementoes of the happy day were presented to the guest of honor, among them being a beautiful gold watch, chain and charm, from Dr. I. Lemieux. After the recipient recovered from his surprise, he expressed his thanks in a few well chosen words. After several other games had been played, the guests departed, with best wishes for many happy returns of the day.

RED LAKE, 4; BELTRAMI, 4.

The Republican Legislative Committee Makes This the Representation.

The Republican legislative committee meeting for the district comprising Red Lake and Beltrami counties held in this city Monday was attended by Dr. N. M. Watson of Red Lake Falls and Ira C. Richardson, of Thief River Falls, the Beltrami county committeeman, W. F. Street, not being present. The question of apportionment came up, and it was decided to give the two counties four delegates each in the legislative convention. Two years ago Beltrami county cast 441 votes for Eustis and Red Lake 422. For Eddy, Red Lake cast 740 votes, while Beltrami gave Morris, of the Sixth, only 490. The decision of the committee to give four votes to each county was not concurred in by Mr. Street, the Beltrami county member. Although he was expected at the meeting he did not show up. It begins to look as if the hitch between the Republicans of the district would be repeated, and the Populist nominee, S. A. Swanson, of this city, would slide in.

F. A. WHITELEY.

Elected as Superintendent of the City Schools.

The Board of Education held an important meeting Monday night, at which a new superintendent for our schools was engaged. The minutes of April 11 were brought out, and on motion of L. Jensen, seconded by T. A. Crompe, that part, relating to the hiring of Prof. McNally, was reconsidered. Prof. McNally was present at the meeting, and informed the board that as far as he was concerned it was entirely unnecessary to reconsider the minutes, inasmuch as he made no claim on the district, and would not accept the position if it were tendered him unanimously unless he were assured of co-operation, which of course could not be expected, as he learned after his return to the city Sunday.

Several prominent citizens were present, and took occasion to protest in most vigorous language against the action of the Board. Messrs. Krueger and Marchildon at this point tendered their resignations and left the meeting. The four remaining members then proceeded to engage Prof. F. A. Witheley, of Excelsior, as Superintendent of the schools.

Mr. Whiteley is a graduate of the State University, and has been superintendent of schools six years. He comes recommended as an earnest and successful educator. He is a married man, with two children, and the family will probably take up their abode in the Violette residence on Third st. Although there are ten places more or less to fill, the Board has not yet engaged any additional teachers.

Stole a Gun.

Willie Bodie was arrested Friday in the town of Equality by Sheriff Sampson on a warrant sworn out by Zotique Bray, for stealing a double-barrel shot gun early in June.

Sheriff Sampson located the boy, who is eighteen years old, Thursday night and the next day had both gun and boy.

Brought before Justice Toupin, he plead guilty to the charge and was sentenced to thirty days in the Polk county jail, whence Sheriff Sampson conveyed him Saturday afternoon. This is not his first experience, he having served a sentence at the St. Cloud reformatory a few years ago. His mother, a widow, lives on a farm in Equality.

Married.

Miss Jennie Bottineau and Mr. Fortuna Borque were quietly married Sunday, the Rev. Fayolle officiating. Both parties are well known and have hosts of friends, who wish them a happy and prosperous career. Miss Bottineau is a daughter of the late Pierre Bottineau, whose name has a place high up on scroll of fame, as one of the early Northwestern voyageurs and she has been one of Red Lake county's efficient and popular teachers the past five years. The groom is a highly respected farmer, a resident of Lambert, where the happy couple will make their home.

STEARNS A BAD ONE

TURNS UP TWICE IN A WEEK ON DIVERSE PETTY CHARGES.

NOW UNDER SENTENCE TO SERVE 60 DAYS IN POLK COUNTY JAIL.

As was stated in Thursdays' Times a warrant had been issued the day before by Judge McLean for the arrest of Byron B. Stearns. The complaint was make by James Morrisey of the Crookston foundry, and charges the prisoner with obtaining money from the plaintiff under false pretenses.

Stearns is the man, who was arrested last Saturday at Red Lake Falls for horse stealing and brought back that day by Chief Gonyea. On Monday morning he had a hearing but had to be discharged for lack of evidence to sustain the charge of horse stealing.

Immediately upon gaining his freedom, Morrissey swore out a warrant, as above stated, for his rearrest, but Stearns must have got wind of the action and disappeared before the officers could serve the warrant upon him. Late yesterday, however, Chief Gonyea located his man at East Grand Forks, and telegraphed his detention.

Some time last March the accused man came to Morrissey and presented an order for $10 on the Red Lake Falls Lumber Company, saying that he had money coming from them. Mr. Morrissey cashed the order, which when presented to the company proved worthless, hence the new trouble.

Chief Gonyea left on the 5 o'clock train Friday for East Grand Forks and returned with the prisioner on the return train in the evening.—Crookston Times.

More Depredations.

The following from the Crookston Tribune adds another chapter to Barney Stearns' downward career:

"Chief of Police Gonyea returned last night from East Grand Forks, having in charge Byron B. Stearns, wanted for passing a worthless order, represented as drawn by the Red Lake Falls Lumber Co., and which was cashed by J. E. Morrissey, of this city. His case came up before Judge McLean to-day and he was given 30 days in the county jail.

"Stearns evidently delights in getting into trouble, for yesterday at East Grand Forks he was arrested for stealing a bicycle. The justice there sentenced the fellow to pay a fine of $25 and costs or 30 days imprisonment in the county jail. This makes 60 days he will have to serve.

Juilus Berg Heard From.

Julius Berg, of Black River township, was in the city Tuesday for news from the authorities at Fergus Falls, as to the condition of his wife, who was committed to the asylum last week. She is reported as very ill, and her recovery is doubtful. Mr. Berg says the stories as to his abuse of his wife are the phantoms of her diseased imagination, and that on the contrary, he has always been a kind and devoted husband, and any assertions to the contrary are doing him a great injustice.

A telegram, announcing the death of Mrs. Berg, awaited the man upon his return home. Two boys, one 12, the other 7 years, are left motherless.

Fables of the Rail--7.

A man who prided himself on his powers of observation was riding through a beautiful country once upon a time, but when his wife asked him what kind of hats women passengers wore, the man was stalled and had to fake up the story about never noticing other women, which, however did not wash with his wife, who was onto his curves.

Moral—To enable the man to see things he should have ridden on the observation cars of the Northwestern Line.

BOLDLY ROB A TRAIN

TWO MASKED MEN DO THE JOB IN COLORADO.

An Elderly Man Resists the Robbers and Is Shot, Dying Almost Instantly—The Robbers Got About $100 in Cash and a Number of Gold Watches and Other Pieces of Jewelry—Conductor Compelled to Hold a Bag While the Robbers Relieved the Passengers.

Salina, Kan., Aug. 7.—A Union Pacific east-bound passenger train was held up by two men several miles west of Hugo, Colo., ninety miles this side of Denver. The passengers in the Pullman sleepers were robbed of their money and valuables. An old man named Fay, a resident of California, who had been visiting in Denver and was on his way to St. Louis, refused to surrender his valuables and fired a shot at one of the robbers, but missed. Thereupon the robbers fired, one shot entering Fay's mouth and coming out at the back of his head, killing him almost instantly. The robbers stopped the train, Jumped Off and Escaped.

The robbers got on to one of the sleepers near Limon, and after the train had started the men made a noise at the door. The conductor, thinking they were tramps, opened the door to put them off. The robbers, who were masked, pointed a pistol at his head and ordered him to lead the way through the coaches. All of the passengers were asleep and the conductor was ordered to wake them, one at a time. The frightened passengers were told to keep quiet or they would be killed, and at the same time were asked to hand over their money and valuables. The robbers obtained about $100 in cash and a number of gold watches and other pieces of jewelry. The robbery took place a few minutes before 1 o'clock yesterday morning. The body of Fay, was taken off at Hugo and shipped to Denver. He was sixty-eight years old and a prominent Odd Fellow of California. The conductor, who was compelled to hold a bag while the robbers relieved the passengers, lost his watch and asked that it be returned to him in order that he might run his train on time. The robbers gave it back. After ransacking the two coaches the men made the conductor pull the bell cord, but the train was going so rapidly that the robbers were taken to Hugo before it slowed up enough to enable them to jump. They compelled the conductor to get off ahead of them so that if any of the passengers they would have shot him first. After the robbers had dismounted they ordered the conductor to return to his train. Miss Shaw of Denver, a passenger on the train, states that when the men entered the cars every one was asleep, and very few knew anything of what was going on until they were awakened by the robbers. When the men came to her berth a pistol was pointed at her face and she was told to be quiet and hand over her valuables. With great presence of mind she opened her pocketbook, letting a number of bills fall out, and then handed the purse, containing some silver, to the robbers. She also managed to save her watch, which was pinned to her dress, by placing her arm over it.

Who Was Killed,

Had Been in Waiting

APPROVED BY M'KINLEY.

Plans for District of Columbia's Centennial as Seat of Government.

Washington, Aug. 7.—President McKinley has approved the provisional plan for the celebration next December of the centennial of the establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia, submitted to him Friday last by President MacFarland, of the board of commerce of the District of Columbia, as chairman of the committee on this celebration, and by other members of the committee. The plan provides for a reception by President McKinley, at the executive mansion in the morning of the day of celebration, to the governors of the states, who are members of the committee, with appropriate addresses, followed by commemorative exercises in congress in the afternoon and a military and naval parade.

QUEEN VICTORIA NEXT.

Anarchist Says England's Sovereign Will Be the Next Victim.

Buenos Ayres, Aug. 7. — Guiseppe Castagni, a brother-in-law of Bresci, has secured passage for Montevideo, after failing to secure the return passage to New York, which he paid three weeks ago. He boasts that Bresci committed a highly commendable deed and asserts that Queen Victoria will be the next victim. Some clerks in the British shipping office here gave him a horsewhipping for his remarks regarding the queen. It is not known whether he will sail for Montevideo or New York.

THE LONLIEST WOMAN.

She's From Washington and Lives Among the Seals.

Without doubt the loneliest woman—that is to say, the one furthest removed from her kind—in all these United States of America, is Mrs. Clark of Washington, the wife of Major E. W. Clark, Government agent of the Pribylof or Seal Islands in the Behring Sea.

This group, composed of the two small islands of St. Paul and St. George, are the homes of nearly all the seals remaining in existence, and they are about 1,800 miles west of the entrance of Puget Sound, and about 200 miles northwest of the Aleutian Islands, beginning at Unimak Pass. St. George, which is the smaller of the two, being about 6 by 12 miles in extent, is 40 miles from St. Paul, and it has a population of about 100 Aleuts and four or five whites, consisting of Major Clark and his wife, a physician, and two or three clerks of the North American Commercial Company, which controls the seal business, and has stores and warehouses on both islands. The little village of St. George contains 25 or 50 houses, including the company's buildings, the agent's house and a Greek church.

There are no other houses on the islands, and Mrs. Clark is the only white woman. Her home is a small cottage of four rooms, very cozy and comfortable, with books and pictures, and a fine outlook over the sea. She does no cooking in her own home, as the Government officials take their meals at the company house near by. Mrs. Clark's nearest neighbor is the wife of the agent on St. Paul, who is less lonely because she has with her two small children, Mrs. Clark's children being grown and having their own homes in the States.

There is no communication between the islands, except by one of the company's ships and by revenue cutters, as other ships are not permitted to visit the islands. These ships come only in the summer, and from October until June Mrs. Clark does not expect to see any one or hear anything from the United States, or to send word home, no matter what happens. Sickness, death, disaster may come to her far off in that forbidding sea, or may visit her own at home, but no word may come or go until navigation is resumed.

St. George is absolutely without trees, but its rolling surface and mountains, 1,000 feet high, are beautifully green with coarse grass and moss, and wild flowers of brilliant hues dot the level stretches near the sea. Blue foxes abound, and over the rocks at the water's edge thousands and thousands of seals in ceaseless activity disport themselves noisily day and night, from June until December, while millions of water fowl fill the air and the sea and flutter about the cliffs. Three hundred days in the year the weather is dark and dismal, and fogs hide the islands for days at a time. The cold is never excessive, but the winter storms are severe, and terrific gales sweep over sea and land. There is no harbor, and ships come to anchor a mile or more from shore.—Washington Star.

Gambling in the Six Nations.

The Indians of the Six Nations will not play cards, for these were brought to this country by the white man, and would have evil for the Indian. They also look upon the violin as an instrument that has led white young people to harm and will not permit its music to be heard among them.

The gambling game played at these religious festivals is the peach-stone game. I have brought back several of them. The Indians lose all their stoicism when indulging in this game.

One of the most impressive things about this game is the manner in which the opposing sides gather about and urge the plays, much as dice-throwers on a Louisiana dock would do. Pointing their two forefingers at the player say coaxingly: "O-han-dah, o-han-dah"—all black—or "Hun-je, hun-je"—all white. The opponents even more fiercely shout "Scha-a-ah" and "Tek-i-ne-ta-weh, tek-i-ne-ta-weh"—two of a kind. This game may last for twenty-four hours, but the excitement never flags.—S. C. Simms in Chicago Tribune.

American Products.

Consul James Boyle, writing from Liverpool under the date of February 15, says there have recently been a number of communications and articles in the Liverpool papers drawing attention to the fact that American manufactures, particularly in specialties, had been accepted by English purchasers in preference to those of home production, the reason given being that the American goods were better made and handier than the home goods and were fully as cheap. Of late, there has been a tendency on the part of English critics to claim that American manufactures were preferred simply because they were cheap, and it was often added they were "nasty" as well as cheap. The statements referred to at the commencement of this report refute this criticism, and American manufacturers can now find plenty of champions in England who base their support on the ground of actual superiority, both of workmanship and adaptability.

Heralding White Flags.

A flag of truce is usually heralded by a trumpet sounding to arrest enemy's attention. On permission to pass being given the party is blindfolded and led to the commander of the outposts.

THE DOCTOR'S VISIT.

How Woman Always Jump at Conclusions.

The way women will jump at conclusions and state suppositions as fact is enough to drive a man crazy. The other night, when Mr. Brown went home to his dinner, his wife said:

"Oh, John, I am so worried about the Smiths."

"What's the matter with them?" said Brown. The Smiths lived across the street.

"Why, the doctor's buggy has been there all day, and now there's another buggy there, so they must be having a consultation. And Johnny ran out about 5 o'clock to the drug store and came back soon."

"But whose sick?" said Brown.

"Mrs. Smith is, of course, and Mr. Smith came home from the office in a great hurry just now. Oh, John, won't you go over to inquire, and ask if there is anything we can do?"

"Yes, I will; I'll go right away." And he did, but when he came back be was in an awful temper.

"The next time, Mrs. Brown, that you make such a fool of me, I'll know it."

"Why, John, what in the world do you mean? How is Mrs. Smith?"

"Nothing the matter with her," growled Brown. "I went there and when Smith came to the door I tiptoed into the house like an idiot, and asked if there was anything I could do. Smith began to laugh.

"'Do for what?' he said.

"'For your wife,' I said, like a fool. 'I hear she is very ill.'

"'She's all right,' said he.

"'And the doctors' buggies,' I began.

"'Oh, those buggies belong to the men who are putting in our new refrigerator.'" Brown glared at Mrs. Brown, who turned red. "So you didn't see the doctors?"

"Well, I saw the buggies, and I supposed of course——"

"But you said they were doctors, and you said Mrs. Smith was sick."

"Well, I supposed of course——"

Brown slammed the door and went out.—St. Paul Globe.

An Oversight.

"What made Knight Stands, the actor leave so suddenly yesterday?"

"At breakfast the landlady asked him how the eggs struck him."

A Recommendation.

The Big Boss—Say, look here. I can't recommend that man for a place on the police force. He has been fined for wife-beating, I find out.

The Little Boss—Did you ever see his ould woman?

"No."

"By gorry, if ye had, ye'd know that the man who could git away wid her was the very wan for handlin' desp'rit cases.—Indianapolis Press.

Strategy.

"What is in that box you are so careful about, if I may ask?" inquired the man who had secured the lower berth in the sleeper.

"That's a collection of rare snakes I am taking to a museum. They are too valuable to be trusted out of my sight," replied the man, who was preparing to climb to the upper shelf.

"Say, I'll trade berths with you."

"All right. I'm not particular where I sleep."—Chicago Tribune.

No Cause to Worry.

"I suppose," he said, as they undulated around the hall, "that my mother would be awfully worried if she knew I was here. She's very religious and thinks it is a terrible sin to dance."

"Oh, never mind," the girl said. "She wouldn't know you were dancing, even if she saw you."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Refused to Correct It.

Morrell—This life is getting to be a constant rush. Even death seems to come quicker than it used to.

Wytte—True. There's the interesting case of a man I knew; buried one day and died the next.

Morrell—Got that twisted, haven't you?

Wytte—No. This man was an undertaker.—Philadelphia Press.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"Who was the sporty guy I saw you talking to?" asked the shoe clerk boarder.

"One of our most noted ethnologists," replied the Cheerful Idiot.

"Him?"

"Yes. He writes books on the races."—Indianapolis Press.

Where His Was.

"Say," said little Freddie to Mr. Murgleson; "do you know what?"

"No; what?"

"When sister Fannie comes down stairs you watch and see how she limps. We've all been getting vaccinated. Mine's on my left arm."—Chicago Times-Herald.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and dated the 24th day of August, A. D., 1882, by Alfred Doutre and Malvina Doutre, his wife, to Solon Marks, and duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds for Polk county, Minnesota, on the 25th day of August, A. D., 1900, by an instrument in writing, duly assigned by said Solon Marks, to William T. Souder, and John Trevor, both of Hennepin county, Minnesota, which said assignment was duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds for Red Lake county, Minnesota, on the Fourth day of June, A. D., 1900, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "P" of mortgages, on page 450, which said mortgage conveyed and mortgaged the following described premises in Polk county, now Red Lake county, Minnesota, to-wit:

IN THE NICK OF TIME.

How the Darkey Knew His White Folks.

One of the old-time southern negroes went to Boston to make his fortune.

After a week of walking up and down he found himself penniless and no work in sight.

Then he went from house to house.

"Ef you please, suh," he began, when his ring at the front door was answered, "can't you give a po' culled man work ter do, or somepin' ter eat?"

And the polite but firm answer invariably was, "No, mister—very sorry, but have nothing for you."

Everyone who answered his ring addressed him as "Mr.," but shut their doors and hearts against him.

Finally he rang the bell at a brownstone front.

A gentleman appeared and the old man began:

"Boss, I is starvin'. Can't you gimme some vittles?"

"You darned, black, kinky-headed rascal!" exclaimed the gentleman. "How dare you ring the bell at my front door? Go round the backyard way to the kitchen, and the cook'll give you something—you black—"

But just there the old man fell on his knees, exclaiming:

"Thank de Lawd, I foun' my own white folks at las'! Thank de Lawd, I foun' e'em—I foun' 'em!"—Atlanta Constitution.

A Smitten Conscience.

"Madame," began the winter pilgrim, "do you remember that last February that I promised to clean the snow out of your yard?"

"Yes, and then sneaked off without doing it," retorted the angry housewife.

"But I came back, madame; tramped through a July sun to keep me word. When I reached your gate the snow had vanished, but you told me to take the scythe and cut the grass instead."

"And you sneaked off again, you—"

"But me conscience smote me. Dat's why I tramped through ten-feet drifts to finish de job.—Indianapolis News.

The Murder in Literature.

But the old gray millionaire in the problem story is by no means without recourse.

"Why do you murder me?" he exclaims. "It is not for you to commit this mysterious crime! For you are by no means the last person in the book who would be suspected of such a thing."

The other is at once struck by the force of this argument, and slinks away, first letting fall the glittering dagger from his nerveless fingers; while the millionaire felicitates himself upon the accurate understanding of the literary proprieties.—Detroit Journal.

Making a Thorough Job.

The next morning after his spree the young man with the aching head was trying to put his desk to rights when the proprietor of the establishment happened in.

FIRST GREAT BATTLE.

The first great battle of the Chinese war has been fought, and the Chinese were forced to retire after a stubborn resistance in which they inflicted a loss of 1,200 on the allies, the Russians and Japanese, being in the advance, suffering most severely, says the Grand Forks Herald. American troops are understood to have taken part in the battle.

Peitsang, where the fight took olace, is about 11 miles north of Tien Tsin, and directly on the road to Peking. The allied forces numbered about 16,000, while that of the enemy is unknown. The Chinese troops are said to be well fed and well paid, a condition which indicates a fairly well filled exchecquer. In this respect mere bodies of riotors are not usually well supplied, and this feature of itself is but one of the many which lend color to the belief that the Chinese government is behind the uprising.

The first battle in which large numbers were engaged is important as indicating in advance something of the character of the campaign. A few years ago the western conception of the Chinese character was such that a European and American force of 16,000 men would have been popularly expected to march in compact formation clear through China, driving the frightened Celestials before it like sheep. This opinion has been revised, and where it has not been it must be. The Chinese are not brave, according to western standards of bravery, but they are sustained by an element which is entirely wanting in the average western soldier. This is the element of blind; unreasoning religious fanaticism. This element has made of the Turks soldiers dreaded by all who come in contact with them. The belief of the Turk that where he fights the foreigner he fights for his religion, that he who dies in battle for his faith is immediately transported to Paradise, these, coupled with an intense fatalism, which denies to the individual the slightest control over his fate, lead the Turks, voluptous and naturally cowardly though they may be, to throw themselves into battle with an abandon, an enthusiasm rarely seen in a Caucasian army. Similar influences inspire the Chinese, and the fact that after an early engagement wounded Chinese in European hospitals attacked their nurses with knives is an illustration of the disposition of the Chinese to fight as long as they breathe.

The advance on Peking is, therefore to be contested, inch by inch by a fanatical foe, armed to a considerable extent, with modern weapons, and terrible as the wildest savage, because, understanding nothing of the usages of civilized warfare, he will torture and butcher wounded men and prisoners indiscrtminately.

Continued heavy rains tne past week are delaying the harvest and endangering the crops.

The Brainerd & Northern rail road has decided to extend its line 25 miles north of Bemidji this season. The Northern Pacific officials were at Bemidji last week and started a crew of surveyors out over the proposed route. Construction crews will follow as quick as possible, several contracts being already let.

FIGHT AT TIEN-TSIN

CHINESE MAKE AN ATTACK ON THE ALLIED FORCES.

By a Series of Brilliant Charges the Enemy Were Driven From Their Positions—Native City Still Defiant—Advance Upon Peking Began Last Thursday—Imperial Edict Ordering Gen. Lung Yu to Gather a Sufficient Number of Picked Troops to Escort Foreign Ministers to Tien-tsin.

London, Aug. 7.—The American and British forces began their advance upon Peking last Thursday, according to a dispatch dated Aug. 2 from Tien-tsin to the Daily Express. "The main bodies of the allies," continued the correspondent, "Marched July 30. Gen. Chaffee was delayed by difficulties of disembarkation. Gen. Dorword (the British commander) had no such obstacles, and his delay is inexplicable. The other foreign troops are now half-way to Lofa. The force includes 20,000 Japanese under Gen. Yamachuchi and 10,000 Russians. The British force totals 9,000 and the other foreign troops are 7,000. We are weak in artillery. On Aug. 1 a strong force of Chinese from the native city Attacked Tien-tsin.

By a series of brilliant charges our troops drove the enemy from their positions. The native city is still defiant and the allies are unwilling to march troops through its streets, as this would mean an immense slaughter. When the Chinese saw a large body of troops marching westward they apparently believed they would have an easy victory over those who were left."

A message to the same paper from a correspondent in Peking, dated July 22, says: "The women have borne all the horrors with marvelous fortitude, and even with cheerfulness. The Chinese wanted peace when the arsenals at Tien-tsin were captured and the negotiations bade fair

To Be Successful.

Unfortunately Li Ping Heng and Kang Yu arrived here at the critical moment and overthrew the peace party. Food has become short, though not terribly so, although we have to be careful."

A Shanghai dispatch, dated Aug. 4, says: "The first overt act upon foreigners occurred this evening. Three Chinese, supposed to be soldiers in disguise, fired at a well known English resident while he was lying asleep on the verandah of his house. He had a narrow escape. From various sources come statements that a large body of Boxers, some estimating the number at 3,000, is gathering south of Tien-tsin and threatening communication."

Safe Conduct for Ministers.

The Shanghai correspondent of the Daily Mail announces the reception of an Imperial edict dated Aug. 2, ordering Gen. Yung Lu to select high military and civil dignitaries to gather up a sufficient number of picked troops to escort the foreign ministers to Tien-tsin as soon as they decided to leave Peking. By the terms of the edict Gen. Yung Lu will be held personally responsible for their safety, and he is given full authority to deal summarily with those opposing the peaceful passage of the escort. "By such acts," concludes the edict, "do we show our good intentions to people from afar, and open our bosoms to them."

Force Is Ample.

Yokohama advices say that Gen. Terauchi has reported to the Japanese government that it is not advisable to send more troops to China, declaring that the united force is now ample to relieve the legations in Peking. Japanese advices say that in addition to causing the execution of high functionaries of pro-foreign tendency, Li Ping Heng has impeached Li Hung Chang, Liu Kuan Yi, viceroy of Nanking, and others on a charge of maintaining relations with foreign powers. A Tien-tsin dispatch of Aug. 1 to Berlin gives detail of an imperial edict issued July 27, ordering the capture of Taku and Tien-tsin by troops from Shangtung and the south.

MESSAGE FROM CONGER.

Says No Fighting Since the Sixteenth by Agreement.

Washington, Aug. 7.—A belated message from Minister Conger was received yesterday at the state department. It came through Consul General Goodnow at Shanghai, who transmitted messages received by Mr. Ragsdale, United States consul at Tien-tsin, from Mr. Conger and Mr. Squires, secretary of the United States legation at Peking. In effect the advices are the same as those received a day or two ago by the state department from Consul Porter at Chefu. Mr. Goodnow's message was transmitted to President McKinley at Canton, and Mr. Adee, acting secretary of state, later in the day issued the following statement concerning its:

"Consul General Goodnow, in a cablegram, dated Shanghai, Aug. 5, which was received at the department of state at 4 o'clock Sunday morning,

Reports the Receipt

by Consul Ragsdale at Tien-tsin of messages from Minister Conger and the secretary of the legation, Mr. Squires, dated July 21, to the following effect: 'All well. No fighting since the 16th by agreement. Enough provisions. Hope for speedy relief.'

"Mr. Goodnow adds that the director of posts, Sheng, had on the 5th communicated to him an imperial edict, dated July 30, ordering Chung Li to provide an escort for the ministers to Tien-tsin when the ministers fixed a date. The edict says the ministers can receive messages not in cipher; but, notwithstanding this, plain messages were returned to some consuls on Aug. 4."

While the messages from Minister Conger and Secretary Squires bear date of July 21,

The Belief Founded

not only upon them, but also upon collateral and later information is that the legationers are yet safe from at least immediate harm. At present there is no means of knowing whether the ministers will accept the offer of the Chinese imperial government to provide an escort for them to Tien-tsin, but it is surmised they will prefer to remain the British legation at Peking until the arrival of the allied forces. Should they leave for Tien-tsin it would be because they regarded it the safer course to pursue. It is considered not unlikely that the Chinese government will be very insistent upon the departure of the ministers in the hope that if they can be gotten to Tien-tsin in safety may be avoided. That the advance upon Peking actually began no later than Friday is well assured now. Officials of the war department still decline to discuss the latest message of Gen. Chaffee, dated Friday, in which he announced that the American, British and Japanese forces were making the start without the remainder of the allies. While no reasons for the reticence of the department are given, it is well understood that Gen. Chaffee's dispatch at this time cannot be given to the public, as it contains information only for the guidance of officials here in the formation of a policy of campaign in China.

The Storming of Peking

LI ONLY DESPONDENT.

Report That He Had Committed Suicide Unfounded.

Shanghai, Aug. 7.—The report that Li Hung Chang had committed suicide is without foundation. He is only in a very despondent state.

Communication Unrestricted.

Paris, Aug. 7.—Sheng, director general of railways and telegraphs, has just communicated to the consuls at Shanghai, according to a special to the Temps, dated Aug. 5, an imperial decree, dated Aug. 2, authorizing the foreign ministers in Peking to communicate without restriction with their governments and ordering their departure for Tien-tsin under a good escort.

Taken by Russians.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 7.—The Russian war office has received a dispatch from Gen. Gredekoff, dated Khabarovsk, Aug. 5, announcing that Aguin had been taken by the Russians after a stubborn fight, and that the Chinese were being pursued in the direction of Tschikar.

GEORGIA TO FOLLOW SUIT.

Constitutional Amendment Proposed That Will Disfranchise the Negro.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 7.—Owing to the result of the recent election in North Carolina in which white supremacy was engrafted on the state, Representative Hardwick will introduce in the next session of the Georgia legislature a bill providing for a constitutional amendment enforcing a property and educational qualification on suffrage, which practically disfranchises the negroes.

AN OFFICER IN DISGRACE.

Second Lieut. E. H. Martin Dismissed From the Army.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Second Lieut. E. H. Martin, Fifth artillery, has been dismissed from the army by direction of the president, in conformity with a sentence of a general court martial by which he was tried and convicted of making "false, fictitious and fraudulent statements of claims and receipts in the accounts of the post exchange at Fort Hancock, N. Y."

Work Was Satisfactory.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 7.—Members of the boundary delimination commission, which has been marking the provisional boundary on the Chilkoot, Chilkat and White passes, have arrived here by the steamer Queen. In interviews the commissioners, W. F. King for Great Britain and O. T. Tittman for America, said the work had been completed to the satisfaction of all. The last work was done on the summit of the Chilkoot, and Tittman said the towns of Dyea and Sheep Camp were deserted.

Mysterious Double Tragedy.

Philadelphia, Aug. 7.—Robert W. Sinclair, aged fifty-one years, a fruit commission merchant in this city, and his wife, aged forty-three, were both found dead last night with a bullet-hole in each of their heads in the garden in front of their summer home at Green Tree station, on the Pennsylvania railway, near this city. Whether it was a case of mutual suicide or murder and suicide will probably never be known. The couple had frequently quarreled and some time ago separated.

Wounded Were Not Shot.

San Francisco, Aug. 7. — Dr. G. P. Smith, who was in the allies hospital at Tien-tsin until July 5, has arrived here on the City of Pekin from China and absolutely denies the story of the shooting of wounded soldiers by Admiral Seymour on the retreat from Tien-tsin. The doctor states that he was present when Admiral Seymour's column arrived and that the wounded were with him.

Anarchists Arrested.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—Lucy Parsons and five other anarchists were arrested here yesterday while attempting to hold a meeting. The police had been informed of the gathering in advance and arrested the principals as soon as they appeared on the platform. A considerable amount of incendiary literature was confiscated.

Old Title May Be Dropped.

New York, Aug. 7. — Some of the railroads are considering the advisability of abandoning the time-honored title of brakeman on passenger trains and calling him assistant conductor. The brakes on passenger trains are no longer worked by hand, but by air, and it is argued that the old title is a misnomer.

Fierce Battle [illegible]ween a Big Sea Lion and Land Lion

CALIFORNIA SENSATION

The Strange Story That Comes From the Pacific Coast—California Mountain Lion in Search of Food—A Battle in the Water

A deadly combat between a monster sea lion and two large California lions, or panthers, was witnessed by two men of Tomalas, Cal., the other day.

It was an extraordinarily grotesque yet truly terrible conflict. The proverbial battle between an elephant and a whale, which it is hardly expected will ever take place, could not be more remarkable.

At the mouth of Tomales Bay there is a small island called Hog Island. The only person who lives on it is Lewis Johnson, who keeps a chicken farm. On a reef running out into the sea there is a rookery of sea lions. The great beasts gambol on the rocks and in the water and enjoy the sunshine all day long. They beat the water into foam and fill the air with their cheerful bellowing.

Samuel Short, of Tomales, visited Hog Island to buy chickens, and while he was engaged in a business discussion with Lewis Johnson their attention was diverted by a commotion in the sea lion rookery, not 200 yards away. The great seals were making a tremendous bowling and bellowing, and to the practised ear of Johnson it was evident that the noise did not, as usual indicate mirth and contentment.

Short thus describes the extraordinary scene that he and his companion then witnessed:

"We looked at the bellowing sea lions and could not understand their excitement. Then we looked at the water and understood.

"Just sticking out of the sea were two enormous cat-like heads glistening with water. They were moving onward toward the rock and the rookery at a great rate.

"Presently the heads reached the rock, and instantly two magnificent mountain lions leaped out of the water. These beasts take to the water very frequently on this coast, and they swim only a little less easily than the seals.

"These two lions might have been making a short cut across the mouth of the bay when they took to the water, or they might have started out with the express purpose of making a dinner of young sea lions. At any rate, this was the object they had in view when they landed on the rock. The young sea lion being tender, and having an immense covering of fat, furnishes a dainty morsel for the robust appetite of the catamount.

"When the panthers landed all the sea lions leaped off into the water except one great big old fellow. He stood up alone to face his deadly enemies. He was doubtless the father of a great family, probably a grandfather and a great-grandfather, too. The fat and fur hung in enormous rolls about his neck, and his whiskers were stupendous.

(The fierce struggle.)

"The two panthers leaped upon the old sea lion, and there was a whirlwind of howls, blood, flying fur and swiftly moving paws, armed with steel-like claws. Then the panthers drew off for a moment. They found that the sea lion could bite very hard and their sides were covered with blood.

"The marauders then stood off a little and rained long-distance blows with lightning speed on the sea lion's head and shoulders. The unfortunate sea monster could do nothing, not being able to reach his antagonists, but it was slow work to produce any effect on him, for his tremendously thick fur and fat stopped the blows. He waddled around on his flippers and tail, bellowing defiance at his enemies and trying vainly to get at them.

"One of the panthers closed with the sea lion again, and this time the latter tried to drag his enemy over the rock into the water with the intention of drowning him. The two cats bit and tore him so furiously he could not accomplish his purpose.

"For a time the combatants sparred for an opening. Suddenly one of the panthers was seized with a devilish idea, for he closed in with the sea lion and bit off his right flipper. The aquatic champion fell to the ground helpless and bleeding to death. The panthers were victorious, and were already licking their chops, as a preliminary to devouring their victim."

She Made Scandalous Charges.

A jury at Philadelphia awarded Miss Laura Evans, a saleslady employed in John Wannamaker's store for 18 years, $12,000 damages, the full amount of her claim, $10,000, with interest from May 9, 1895, in her suit against Louisa M. Wright, also known as Louisa Wernie, a customer. It was a slander uttered by Miss Wright which caused the bother.

Charles C. Dupont has been refused a divorce by the New York courts. Dupont and his wife first met in a boarding-house in Philadelphia, Hallowe'en, 1896. A secret courtship followed. The secret became known, however, as secrets will. Then, according to Dupont's story, the dean of the university insisted upon his marrying the girl. Dupont married her.

BLOOD.

People Who Poke Into the Conversation of Others.

Brown is a rabid Boer sympathizer. Not so Green; he waves the Union Jack whenever the occasion permits, and that is often. While White and I are just the plain anti-imperialists, but without enthusiasm therefore noncombatants.

Brown and Green were at it again yesterday at luncheon. Green had brought home with him one of the noon editions of one of the evening papers, and tears fell from his eyes as he read the Spion Kop casualty list.

"Well," observed Brown, "I suppose Buller has 'fallen back again to a better position,' has he?"

"Oh, I don't know," sneered Green, pushing the dish of Dutch cheese around the sugar bowl where he could not see it.

"He's a sort of natural born backfaller, ain't he?" Brown pursued.

"Aw, g'wan," interjected Green with a look of annoyance, "you ain't got a drop of patriotic blood in you—didn't you descend from Englishmen?"

It was the suggestion of blood that caused White to put in a word. He shouldn't have done it. I foresaw the result; he had no business entering the war of words at all. I tried to kick him under the table, but I couldn't reach him.

"Talkin' 'bout bein' patriotic on account of blood," he observed, "my grandmother on my mother's side was a Spaniard; my mother was born in Greece; her father was an East Indian, while my father was an Englishman and I was born in Ireland. What do you think of that for blood?"

Green's eyes glittered.

"I should think," he snapped, "you'd better take sarsaparille for it——"

Poor White gasped—but then he had no business poking his nose in.

"With that many strains of different blood in you," Brown observed calmly, but with no less sarcasm, "I should think you would be fighting with yourself all the time."

I foresaw the result. Why will people poke into the conversation of others, and fling about bits of conversation that are not pearls?—Detroit Free Press.

His Grudge Against Rum.

"Ah, my friend," sighed the reformer, "rum causes lots of trouble in this world."

"Indeed it does," agreed the listener.

"No doubt you or I would be happier were it not for the rum demon," went on the reformer.

"Indeed, we would," again agreed the patient listener.

"And how has it caused you unhappiness?" asked the reformer.

"Years ago a woman told me that if I stopped drinking she would marry me."

"And you could not stop?"

"No," roared the patient listener; "no, I did stop."—Baltimore American.

The Hero's Predicament.

Nowhere, it is likely does the course of true love run more smoothly than in grand opera.

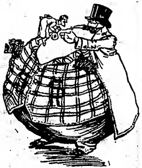
"Be mine!" roared the hero, with tolerable distinctness.

"M—er—yuh—uh!" shrieks the heroine, culminating an arpeggio in the upper register with a prolonged trill on the C in alt.

"Oh, this terrible uncertainty!" protests the hero.

The beautiful girl regards him yearningly; she would speak, only everything has to be sung in grand opera, and then, too, her maidenly reserve restrains her more or less.—Detroit Journal.

To the Trust.



You're fat and you're sleek,
  You're broad as you're long;
You're squeezing and pushing,
  You know it is wrong.
You gourmand, you're gorging yourself with the "dust"
Of others, who hope with this diet you'll bust.

Next!

Miss Goldrox—You don't seem to have much regard for Count Spaghetti. What do you know of him?

Mr. Peppery—Nothing of my personal knowledge, but some of my friends used to know him quite well.

Miss Goldrox—Then you never met him before?

Mr. Peppery—Oh, [illegible] always shaved myself.—[illegible]

Couldn't [illegible]

Willie—Your friend [illegible] is one of the finest pianists I ever heard. Why don't he go on the stage?

[illegible]—Wouldn't pay. His name is too easy to pronounce.—New York Weekly.

The Seasoning.

Mr. Tenderfoot—This bear meat seems very highly spiced.

Cactus [illegible]—[illegible] to be, [illegible] cinnamon bear steak.—Baltimore American.

LITTLE ROMANCE.

It Will Disappoint Sticklers for a Conventional Climate.

"Step, step, step!"

It was some one mounting the stairs. It was a slow and heavy step and there was something grim and gruesome about it—something to tell the listener that the sole owner and proprietor of the step was a lop-shouldered sun-of-a-gun without enough mercy in his heart to grease a sunflower seed.

"'Tis he—the landlord!" gasped the woman who sat in the gloom of her garret room with white face and palpitating heart.

The step came nearer—the frail door was kicked open and Adamant Flintstone stood before her and said:

"Woman, I am here. If you cannot pay me my rent out you go!"

"Oh, Mr. Flintstone, have you no heart?" wailed the unfortunate.

"Not a bit. Pay or go!"

"But think of your mother."

"I haven't any."

"Then your sisters."

"Never had one."

"Is it possible that because I owe you $120 rent you would drive me out on the street on a night like this?"

"I am in the landlord business for money," was the unfeeling response.

"But you can't believe that heaven will prosper a man who has neither pity nor mercy?"

"I can. I am making 14 per cent. on my investments. Will you pay or shall I chuck you out of the window?"

"I—I will pay!" she sobbed as the storm increased and the wind tried to shake the stuffing out of the old tenement.

And pulling two $100 bills out of pocketbook she handed them out and received $80 in change, and Adamant Flintstone chuckled in his frozen heart as he turned away and left her trying to choke herself with a buttonhook.—Washington Post.

Effect of a Sudden Check.

"Speaking of large babies," remarked Mr. Meeker, animatedly, as the conversation became general. I knew a couple of twins once named Herkinal, that weighed—"

At that instant he caught the stony glare of Mrs. Meeker's eye turned in his direction.

"—Four pounds!"

And he said it without pausing the twentieth part of a second.—Chicago Tribune.

Acted on the Suggestion.

"It seems foolish," said the young woman, last week, "for a man to spend his money on a ridiculous valentine when the girl would appreciate a box of candy or something of that sort so much more."

"Ah!" said the young man.

This morning the young woman was much mystified when she received a boiled ham and a dozen cheese sandwiches in a neat box.—Indianapolis Press.

Occasion to Yawn.

The lover foresaw difficulties.

"A chasm," be exclaimed, "yawns at our feet."

Vivian Briskit, the Chicago girl, had never looked more beautiful than she was looking to-night; but there was a good deal of horse sense about her for all that.

"Perhaps it's because my feet are such a chestnut!" she suggested with the utmost candor.—Detroit Journal.

O! Goodness Gracious!

"I shall nevah speak to him again, so theah!" exclaimed young Mr. Sissy.

"Who, deah boy?" asked Sappington.

"That howwid fellah Pepper. Met him lawst night at Tom Blusgore's smokah. 'How-d'-do!' said I, quite politely. 'Jove!' said he, 'you here? I thought this was a stag affair.'"—Philadelphia Press.

According to Sheldon.

Editor Sheldon—You say here that "General Buller's army recrossed the Tugela with much profanity and loud curses." Can't you change that sentence? It doesn't meet our requirements.

War Correspondent—Sure. Make it read that they crossed with plenty of dash.—Baltimore American.

Had a Pretty Good Hunch.

"How did you come to pluck up enough courage to propose to Miss Frisbie, Bunting?"

"Well, she suggested that I had better not send her an expensive valentine this year, but save my money to go to housekeeping," confessed Bunting.—Detroit Free Press.

Shutting Him Off.

"Now, if I were only an ostrich," began the mean man at the breakfast table, as he picked up one of his wife's biscuits, "then——"

"Yes," interrupted the patient better half, "then I might get a few feathers for that old hat I've worn for three winters."—Chicago News.

After the Opera.

She—Grandpa heard the new soprano the other night. He thinks she is wonderful!

He—Indeed! Does he admit that she is equal to Jenny Lind?

She—Of course not; but she made him forget to mention it until he got home.—Puck.

Got It.

She—What we claim is that we ought to have a voice in the management of the affairs of this country.

He—Oh, I've no objection to that. I thought you wanted to vote.—Chicago Tribune.

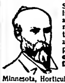
THE FARMER'S GARDEN.



Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

BLOOD.

People Who Poke Into the Conversation of Others.

Brown is a rabid Boer sympathizer. Not so Green; he waves the Union Jack whenever the occasion permits, and that is often. White White and I are just the plain anti-imperialists, but without enthusiasm therefore noncombatants.

Brown and Green were at it again yesterday at luncheon. Green had brought home with him one of the noon editions of one of the evening papers, and tears fell from his eyes as he read the Spion Kop casualty list.

"Well," observed Brown, "I suppose Buller has 'fallen back again to a better position,' has he?"

"Oh, I don't know," sneered Green, pushing the dish of Dutch cheese around the sugar bowl where he could not see it.

"He's a sort of natural born backfaller, ain't he?" Brown pursued.

"Aw, g'wan," interjected Green with a look of annoyance, "you ain't got a drop of patriotic blood in you—didn't you descend from Englishmen?"

It was the suggestion of blood that caused White to put in a word. He shouldn't have done it. I foresaw the result; he had no business entering the war of words at all. I tried to kick him under the table, but I couldn't reach him.

"Talkin' 'bout bein' patriotic on account of blood," he observed, "my grandmother on my mother's side was a Spaniard; my mother was born in Greece; her father was an East Indian, while my father was an Englishman and I was born in Ireland. What do you think of that for blood?"

Green's eyes glittered.

"I should think," he snapped, "you'd better take sarsaparilla for it——"

Poor White gasped—but then he had no business poking his nose in.

"With that many strains of different blood in you," Brown observed calmly, but with no less sarcasm, "I should think you would be fighting with yourself all the time."

I foresaw the result. Why will people poke into the conversation of others, and fling about bits of conversation that are not pearls?—Detroit Free Press.

His Grudge Against Rum.

"Ah, my friend," sighed the reformer, "rum causes lots of trouble in this world."

"Indeed it does," agreed the listener.

"No doubt you or I would be happier were it not for the rum demon," went on the reformer.

"Indeed, we would," again agreed the patient listener.

"And how has it caused you unhappiness?" asked the reformer.

"Years ago a woman told me that if I stopped drinking she would marry me."

"And you could not stop?"

"No," roared the patient listener; "no, I did stop."—Baltimore American.

The Hero's Predicament.

Nowhere, it is likely does the course of true love run more smoothly than in grand opera.

"Be mine!" roared the hero, with tolerable distinctness.

"M—er—yuh—uh!" shrieks the heroine, culminating an arpeggio in the upper register with a prolonged trill on the C in alt.

"Oh, this terrible uncertainty!" protests the hero.

To the board of County Commissioners of the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota:

The undersigned land owners, whose lands will be liable to be effected by, or assessed for, the expense of the construction of the drainage ditch hereafter described, would respectfully represent that the public health, convenience and welfare require the establishment and construction of a drainage ditch along the following described route in the town of Terrebonne in said county of Red Lake and that the construction of the same would be of public benefit and utility.

A general description of the proposed starting point, route and terminus of said ditch, is as follows:

Commencing at a point on the south line of section 36 in the town of Terrebonne, township 152 range 43, in Red Lake county, Minnesota, about 20 rods east of the southeast corner of said section, thence running in a northwesterly direction through sections 36, 35 and 26, to about the northwest corner of section 26, thence more westerly to a point near the centre of the west line of section 22, thence northwesterly through sections 21, 16 to the centre of the north line of section 16, thence northerly to a point near the centre of sections 9, thence following a small creek in a southwesterly direction through section 9 and to about the centre of section 5, all in said town of Terrebonne, and terminating at the point last mentioned in section 5, having as its outlet a creek.

And your petitioners pray that you will proceed to establish such drainage ditch and cause the same to be constructed as provided by Chapter Ninety-seven 1897, General Laws of Minnesota for 1887, and subsequent amendments thereto.

Vic's Letter.

Farlac, P. I., July 4th, 1900.

To the Gazette.—

I will take the pleasure of dropping the Gazette a few lines today.

It is the 4th of July today, but we can see but little difference between this and any other day.

We were awakened this morning by the regimental band of the 12th Infantry, which is stationed here. We then partook of a meal of hardtack, bacon, boiled potatoes, and coffee. No booming of cannon or discharge of artillery, although we have in the ammunition store room several thousand rounds of blank ammunition for carbine and pistol both. News has reached us here that G troop, of which Simon Paul is a member, has been in a lively fight. They are stationed at San Madra. Two Americans were killed and two wounded.

Orders were received here yesterday to the effect that several regiments of U. S. troops now serving in the Philippine Islands were to proceed to China. We are left behind. Not that we are anxious to go, but would like to have been represented. The 12th Infantry from here will go, also the 18th and 4th.

Gen. Del Pilor offers to raise a regiment of natives for U. S. service in the Philippines.

Ernest Vieu, formerly of Red Lake Falls, but now of Co. C., 12th U. S. Infantry, is among the latest of my old acquaintances that I have met. He is in good health.

VIC.

The following letter is published by request:

Adcala, P. I., June 17, 1900.

My Dear Mother,—

I received your letter this morning and was much pleased to hear from you. I also got the scapular and will wear it. The rainy season has set in for good now and it has rained for two days steady. I am in good health and we have a nice building to live in. I met Victor Patnaude, of Red Lake Falls, last week. One of my pictures sent to sister Olive is for you. I think that we will go back soon, as the fighting is almost finished. I feel lonesome at times, but I bought myself a horse and instead of walking in the mud I ride. As soon as I get back to the States I will go and see you. I was in the hospital five days with sore feet, but am all right now. Give my best regards to Mr. Emard and family.

Wishing you good health and courage, I remain your loving son,

Ernest Viau,

Fables of the Rail--8.

A fiery dragon that lived in an adjacent wood had long preyed on the village, and finally the chief of police issued a proclamation in which he offered a reward of $2.00 for the capture of the dragon. Here was the opportunity for which Hawkshaw, the detective, had waited. He had the dragon hauled up on supplementary proceedings and the court gave the beast three hours in which to leave town. The dragon took the railroad tracks, but being slow to move darkness caught him, when as everyone knows, a dragon goes to sleep. Just then a North-Western train came along and ground the dragon into pulp.

Moral—In becoming a modern St. George the North-Western line was simply sustaining its reputation as a public benefactor.

Among the Lucky Ones.

The State High School Board met in St. Paul on Saturday and apportioned $85,000 among 115 High Schools of the State, each receiving the sum of $700. The Graded Schools received $200 each. Several new High Schools were added to the list, among them being those at Red Lake Falls, Ada, Barnesville and Excelsior. High School Inspector Geo. B. Aiton and Graded School Inspector A. W. Rankin were re-elected for the year. The news as to the placing of our schools among the accredited High Schools is not a surprise to Red Lake Falls people, because we were practically there last winter, after the visit of Inspectors Rankin and Aiton who at that time decided to recommend us for the grant. The only danger was that they would change their mind, which happily they did not do.

Lawn Social.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church will serve ice cream and cake next Wednesday, August 22nd, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. N. Bourdon. Price 15 cents.

The Log Drive.

The big 38 million feet log drive, which Lammers Bros. had contracted to deliver to the Crookston and Grand Forks Lumber Companies, commenced running past this city Sunday morning. The Clearwater river presented a larger volume of water than has been seen in it for some time, the result of the heavy rains of the past week, combined with the operation of the dams on the upper river. It was thought for some time that it would be possible for the contractors to get the logs to their destination, but the water is receding fast, and Mr. Lammers informed The Gazette yesterday that it is more than likely that the balance of the drive will be hung up here for the season. The rear of the drive is now below the Terrebonne dam, but progress is very slow, a mile a day being considered good work. The drivers have been paid off here, through the First State Bank, and although only about a third of them have so far received their checks, some ten thousand dollars has already been paid. Negotiations are pending between the Crookston company and the Red Lake Falls company with a view to having the remaining logs cut here, but the chances seem slim for an agreement, the firms being a considerable ways apart in their ideas of what would constitute a proper price per thousand feet for the work.

Married.

Mr. Henry I. Conklin, of Fertile, and Miss Eugenie LaFreniere, of this city, were married yesterday at high noon, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. O. LaFreniere, the Rev. Fr. Fayolle officiating. Miss Emily LaFreniere, a sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr. Charles Tschida, of Fertile, was best man. The parlor was handsomely decorated with natural flowers. After partaking of a wedding dinner the bridal party left for Fertile, where they will be at home after August 19th.

The bride has been a resident of this city for the past ten years, and has during the greater part of this time been one of the county's favorite school teachers. The groom has lived at Fertile for six years. He is a plumber by trade, but is at present engineer in Geo. Kronschaabel's brick yard.

The Gazette extends congratulations.

Died.

Oliver Durand, who had been suffering with inflammatory rheumatism for several months past, died Friday evening at six o'clock. Deceased was married last summer to Mrs. S. Brouillette, and besides his wife, leaves a babe not a month old. The funeral occurred Sunday morning, a requiem mass being celebrated at St. Joseph's church.

Deceased was born in Saguenay, Quebec, Feb. 17, 1665, going to South Bend., Ind., in 1868. On Friday, Aug. 10, 1878, he moved here with the family, and on Friday, the 10th, just 22 years after, to the day, he died. Although he had suffered much during his illness, his death was calm and peaceful.

The family desire to thank their friends for many kind attentions.

Township Fire Insurance.

The annual report of the Minnesota State Insurance Commissioner contains the following regarding township mutual fire insurance:

"The remarkable growth of town mutual fire business in this state during recent years necessitates a separate report, in justice to increase of such magnitude as to envolve now over 77,000 farmers, and over $108,000,000 of insurance. The companies doing a general business have been charging during recent years a rate of 75 cents per annum for each $100 insurance in force upon farm property. The town mutuals have done this during the past ten years for an average of 17 cents per $100 or a saving of 58 cents per $100 per year. The average amount of insurance per year carried by the town mutuals of the state during the past ten years is $61,599,316, so that the town mutuals of Minnesota have saved to the farmers of the state during these ten years the aggregate of $3,572,000. Such a thing as failure is unknown among this class of companies. They can't fail so long as their operations are conducted upon the present basis, and the corporate character and powers remain unchanged. But one danger lies ahead of them. Should they become over-confident, and attempt to reach out into a broader field, insuring other than farm property, throwing off their present geographical restrictions, and otherwise taking upon themselves a wider scope of rights and powers, their utility will soon be destroyed.

N. P. Extension.

Bemidji is full of townsite boomers as a result of the proposed extension of the B. & N., which is a part of the N. P. system, from that point to Black Duck, a distance of about 25 miles, which it is said will be completed before snow flies this fall. Several towns have already been platted and many of the lots sold at fancy prices. Sturgeon Falls, platted near the Canadian line, far beyond Black Duck Lake, but on the survey of the proposed extension, is enjoying the biggest boom, the corner lots there being held at $1,500. The country through which the proposed road runs is a very rich one, and as soon as it is opened up by the new line there will be a great influx of settlers.

The Harvest.

Joe Cyr began threshing yesterday on the Paradis farm and the story of the thresher was eagerly awaited. A yield of twenty bushel to the acre is reported, the grade No. 2 Northern. King heads and wild oats effected the grade more than the wet weather of the past week although this had something to do with it. Before the heavy rains last week the crop prospects were wonderfully bright. Although the drouth in the early part of the season had made the crops very irregular, still the average was good, and the grade never better. Thousands of acres were destroyed by hail, just as the crop was ready to cut. Then the entire Northwest was deluged with rains of a week's duration, and on account of the short straw and necessary irregular bundles shocks have been thoroughly soaked, and the close, hot weather sprouted a great deal of grain. In the fields that were ripe cutting was delayed until the grain is over ripe, and at the first high wind or the first touch of the harvester, myriads of kernels went rattling to the ground. In the face of all these adverse conditions, Red Lake county will probably come out with at least as good a yield as last year, and we have yet reason to believe it will be better. The weather the past week, since Saturday, has been simply perfect, and the wheat harvest is practically completed.

MURDERS A FRIEND

EXPRESS MESSENGER LANE'S ASSASSIN ARRESTED.

A Former Messenger and Friend of the Dead Man Confesses to a Most Horrible Crime—He Was to Be Married in a Few Days and Needed the Money—His Sweetheart Is Prostrated.

Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 14.—Charles R. H. Ferrell, a former employe of the Adams Express company, was arrested yesterday afternoon in this city and has confessed to the killing of Messenger Charles Lane and the robbery of the way safe of the Adams Express company on the Pennsylvania eastbound train which arrived in this city at midnight Friday. One thousand dollars of the money which he had stolen was recovered.

Ferrell was to have been married Thursday next to Miss Lillian Costlow, the beautiful young daughter of Patrick Costlow, an engineer on the Pennsylvania lines. He had been discharged from the employ of the Adams Express company about three months ago and had not since been able to secure employment. He confessed that the motive of the robbery was to secure money of which he felt in great need on account of his Approaching Marriage.

The money recovered he had given to Miss Costlow to keep for him, saying that it was money he had saved from his earnings. He was at the home of his affianced and in her company when placed under arrest.

Ferrell is but twenty-two years of age and has a splendid physique, being six feet in height. When the officers took him into custody he assumed a nonchalant demeanor, but when he found he could no longer deceive the officers he made a full confession. After his statement had been taken he was taken to the police station and went into a state of nervous collapse, and orders were given to watch him closely to prevent him doing himself bodily harm. The confession of Ferrell disclosed a premeditated and that seemed almost impossible of belief to those who looked upon the man of gentlemanly and refined appearance who reluctantly told the story of the murder and the robbery. He said that he had become desperate because of his inability to secure employment and a realization of the fact that he must have money to defray the expenses of his approaching marriage. The robbery had been carefully planned and it included the murder of Express Messenger Lane. He knew Lane well. In fact they were friends, and he relied upon Lane's confidence to help him execute the crime. He knew that considerable money was always carried by the messenger on Pennsylvania Train No. 8 between St. Louis and Columbus, and that he was certain to secure a large sum if he on that train. Having provided himself with a Smith & Wesson six shooter, .38 caliber, he went to Urbana Friday morning and waited for No. 8. When the train arrievd there Ferrell went at once to the express car and told Lane that he was out of money and asked permission to ride to Columbus with him. Lane consented, never for a moment suspecting the treachery of his pretended friend. For a short time after the train left Urbana they chatted pleasantly. Lane sat in a chair in the back of the car with his back slightly turned. When Ferrell had finally nerved himself for the crime he drew his revolver and stepped up behind Lane unobserved and in rapid succession into the messenger's back. After he had taken out all the sacks containing the money packages, money orders and way bills, he placed them in a small satchel and waited until the car arrived at Plain City he slipped off the train. He secured a room at a hotel and retired for the night. He came to this city on the morning train, and after going to his room and changing his clothes went to the home of his sweetheart, to whom he gave the money to keep for him. As soon as it was learned that Ferrell had given the money to his sweetheart, Inspector Barron went to the house and secured it. The young lady was by the disclosures. She had not suspected Ferrell of wrongdoing for an instant, and the news was a terrible shock to her and to her parents, who had regarded Ferrell as a model young man. The young lady had never doubted his story that the money which he placed in her keeping had been earned and saved by him as he stated. Ferrell's home is in Steubenville, Ohio. His father is said to be a bridge carpenter and a highly respected citizen of that place.

Fired Three Shots

SPEEDY BOATS.

Russia Orders Warships Which Can Catch an Ocean Greyhound.

Vienna, Aug. 14.—From St. Petersburg comes a statement that the Russian government has just ordered two large and speedy warships, and work has already been begun on them at the docks there. The two cruisers will be 350 feet long, 40 feet wide, and will have a speed of twenty-five knots an hour. It is estimated that the total cost will be 6,000,000 roubles.

Forest Fires Out.

Detroit, Aug. 14.—A special to the Free Press from East Tawas, Mich., says the forest fires which have been threatening that city were all extinguished by a heavy rainfall.

Tornado in Pennsylvania.

Pittsburg, Aug. 14.—Word has just been received here that at New Kensington, Pa., almost the entire plant of the Pittsburg Reduction company's aluminum works was destroyed by a tornado. The loss is estimated at not less than $100,000, and it will necessitate the closing down of the works for an indefinite period.

Blaze at Hudson.

Hudson, Wis., Aug. 14.—The meat market of Hodgin & Miller was burned with a loss upon building and contents of about $3,000.

PRAYING IN STREETS.

Impressive Mediaeval Spectacle Witnessed in Vienna.

The annual processions of Corpus Christi, in which the Emperor takes part, are like the proverbial peas in a pod for family resemblance. But the pageantry of the court has a perennial attraction, and many English and Americans go to Vienna every year to witness it and to get a glimpse of that unique sight—an Emperor praying and kneeling in the streets. The monarch passes in state to the cathedral as early as 7 a. m. This year, as before, he drove in a state carriage drawn by eight white horses. The heir apparent drove with him. Behind him came the magnificently accoutered Hungarian and Austrian bodyguards.

The first service was held in the church. In the meantime the route which the foot procession takes was laid with boards, over which grass was strewn. Here and there were erected altars, and before them a canopy for the imperial worshipers. A fanfare of trumpets announced that the procession had formed. The band struck up "The Hymn to the Emperor" at the spot where its composer had dwelt as a choir boy of the ancient cathedral. The bells were rung, and the silvery tongues of little orphan boys, heading the procession, were heard singing a well-known hymn. Behind them came solemn-visaged priests and cowled monks reciting paternosters in sotto voice, with hands crossed on the breast. They looked sadly out of place in the bright sunlight—these the real rulers of clerical Austria. Next came the vicars of the various parishes displaying their distinctive bannerets, like temporal knights of old; then the civic corporation, then the officers of the household, the holders of the various Austrian orders, and the military staff. Lastly there appeared the magnificent palanquin of state, under which walked the cardinal bearing the host, before which the soldiers knelt and men reverently uncovered. Behind was the solitary figure of the Emperor. He was bareheaded, and, like the members of his court, bore a lighted candle. He seemed in splendid health, and at the altar in the garden walked with elastic step to the priedieu under the canopy. The archdukes took up their position behind him. His Majesty wore a full general's uniform—cocked hat with green plumes, red trousers and the distinctive tunic, with its pale lambent sheen of delicate green. A wonderful scheme of color, with its background ablaze with the uniform of the guards of the household, and representative of all the chivalry and nobility of the dual monarchy, says the Pall Mall Gazette.

There was certainly a strange incongruity in this mediaeval display amid its garish modern surroundings. The materially minded might have regarded it as nothing more or less than solemn mummery, but the sight of the monarch and his subjects worshiping under the canopy of heaven kept back the irreverent smile. The moment was deeply impressive when at a given signal, the whole of the court and soldiers knelt and the Kaiser devoutly crossed himself in a silence that was almost audible.

Few Climb Stairs Properly.

If one would avoid fatigue in climbing stairs, he must learn to do it properly. A physician of repute tells how this should be done. "Usually," he says, "a person will tread on the ball of the foot in taking each step. This is very tiresome and wearing on the muscles, and it throws the entire suspended weight of the body on the muscles of ing or climbing stairs seek for the most equal distribution of the body's weight possible. In walking upstairs your feet should be placed squarely down on the step, heel and all, and then the work should be performed slowly and deliberately. In this way there is no strain upon any particular muscle, but each one is doing its duty in a natural manner. The woman who goes upstairs with a spring is no philosopher, or at least she is not making a proper use of her reasoning faculties. The habit, too, of bending over half double when ascending a flight of stairs is exceedingly reprehensible. In any exertion of this kind, when the heart is naturally excited to a more rapid action, it is desirable that the lungs should have full play. The crouching position interferes with their action, the blood is imperfectly aerated, and there is trouble at once. Give the lungs a chance to do their work everywhere and at all times."

Is Asphalt Liquid or Solid?

Down in Trinidad, where most of the asphalt used in paving the streets is produced, opinion is divided as to whether the substance may be classed as a liquid or a solid. Upon this issue a recent trial in Trinidad turned. The stratum of pitch in that island is usually from four to seven feet below the surface, and when cut through, the pitch melts and oozes out. So if a man dug down near his neighbor's lot, he would be able to collect pitch coming from under his neighbor's land. The plan was described by one of the witnesses as "the plan adopted when you want to dig your neighbor's pitch." It "bulges out," he explained, "and you shave it off each morning." But suit was brought by one outraged neighbor whose pitch had thus been shaved off in adjoining land. The defense was that an underground stratum of pitch was like so much water, no man's property until appropriated. But the court held that pitch was a mineral, and that you had no more right to abstract it from a neighbor by the oozing process than you would have to tap his deposit of iron or silver.

May Be True.

The story is told that when General Ludlow was stationed at Detroit, in charge of the river and harbor work, a contractor visited him who wanted to do some government work. With his visiting card the contractor put on the table a fifty-dollar bill. General Ludlow drew forth two cigars and gave the contractor one of them. Then turning to the table, and not seeing a match, he took the fifty-dollar note, twisted it into a lighter, set it aflame at the open grate fire, and lit his cigar with it slowly and carefully. Then he handed the burning stump of the bill to the contractor.

He Didn't Tell.

He—Can you keep a secret?
She—Of course I can.
He—So can I.

BEING THE ICE MAN.

One of Them Tells Why His Vocation is No Perennial Picnic.

A hundred members of the Massachusetts Ice Dealers' Association met and dined at the Hotel Bellevue the other day, it being their second annual affair of this nature. The President of the association, the Hon. William M. Eaton of Quincy, presided. Speaking of the ice business, Elmer H. Bright of Boston, Secretary and Treasurer of the association, said:

"The ice men differ in business from almost any other line. Their acquaintance with one another has been limited; so last year we resolved that it would be a benefit to all to meet once a year and discuss the ice situation. I do not believe there is any business done where the amount of money invested is so large and the profit so comparatively small as it is in ours. The prices of iron, lumber, horses, and all the material that goes to make up an ice plant, have had considerable advance, but the price of ice has not advanced a cent. There are a number of men in the business who are in very good circumstances but you will find that they are all men well along in years, who made their money years ago, when profit was greater. Conditions since then have changed materially. The large customers had their ice boxes on the floors of their stores or places; now they are so high up that where in former years one man could do the work it takes two now, and in a great many cases more. This, of course, all means a very considerable increase in cost of putting out ice, and labor in our business is one of the greatest problems that we have to deal with.

"The public, as a class, is very inconsiderate. I do not know that it intends to be but I suppose it is through thoughtlessness. If the people would stop and think that they, like their neighbors, want a much larger quantity of ice on hot mornings in summer, particularly Saturday and Monday, and that for this reason it takes so much longer to deliver the ice, I think they would be reasonable and not feel abused at a little waiting.

"We are able to load on wagons only about one-half of the ice that the icehouse holds; in some places not over 40 per cent. Our teams, starting out very early in the morning and not getting in in hot weather until very late at night, make it a hard business to follow and handle. The ice man has plenty to do in the very hottest and the very coldest weather. On the whole, it is not a business offering untold inducements to men to go into it."—Boston Transcript.

DECLARATIONS OF LOVE.

Various Ways in Which Proposals Were Made in 100 Love Stories.

Some one with a weakness for statistics has waded through 100 standard love stories and tabulated the various ways in which lovers behave in popping the question. In 100 cases where the proposal was accepted no less than 67 gentleman kissed the lady and began "all of a sudden." Eighty-one declared they could not live without her, while seventy-two held the girl's hand and thirty-six took her in their arms.

Twenty-six lovers sat down to put the question, four fidgeted about with their handkerchiefs—which three afterward required to wipe away the tears of joy; three stood on one foot, and the same number "reclined on the grass;" only four thought it necessary to go down on both knees, but twice as many knelt on one. In thirty-two cases kissing took place. Only four kissed the girl on the cheek, but ten saluted the fair one's curls! Three kissed her eyes, two her hands, one the top of her head, one her nose (by mistake), and one her shawl.

The behavior of the women is equally interesting. Eighty-seven knew something was coming and sank into the gentleman's arms, sixty-one cushioned their heads against his manly bosom, while twelve preferred his shoulder. One sank back into a chair, and no less than eleven clasped their arms around his neck. The eyes of seventy-two were full of love, seven had eyes moist and limpid, and the optics of two were dry. Forty-eight wept aloud and six shed silent tears of joy.

Twenty-seven fumbled with their gloves, fans and flowers, twelve buried their faces in their hands and one struggled not to be kissed. On the other hand, six girls kissed the man first. Nine rushed from the room to tell somebody and five giggled hysterically. Only three were pale and agitated, but eighteen were flushed. Three told their lovers "to ask papa," and one actually sneezed (shades of Venus!) and one (a widow), said, "Yes, but don't be silly."—Pittsburg Despatch.

Paper Bicycles Next.

A paper bicycle has now invaded the field. Paper fibre, similar to that sometimes used in the manufacture of railway carriage wheels, is employed for tubing, and is as strong as any in use. A factory is said to be contemplated for the production of bicycles of this sort.

Night Marches Slow.

On night marches troops do not usually advance at more than a mile an hour. In attack neither officer nor man is to stop to help the wounded, and no halt permitted until the enemy is driven off.

"How was Admiral Dewey's naval rank reduced when he got married?" "He became Mrs. Dewey's second mate."—Argonaut.

HOW THE HORSE EATS.

ONE OF NATURE'S REMARKABLE PROVISIONS FOR OLD AGE.

A Horse's Teeth Wear Down But Always Keep Sharp—Use of Saliva as an Aid to Digestion—Importance of Chewing.

A horse with a "full mouth" has forty-two teeth, namely, six front teeth in each jaw, and one tush and six back teeth on each side of each jaw, writes an English veterinarian in the London Live Stock Journal. Each tooth is covered with a very hard, white and comparatively thin layer of enamel, which in the front teeth forms a depression in the cutting surface table of the tooth. Hence, when a front tooth comes into wear, its table has two irregularly-shaped rings of enamel, with soft tooth-substance (dentine) between them.

In each back tooth the layer of enamel is doubled in on each side so as to form on the table sharp and hard ridges, which project above the soft dentine. The tables of the back teeth slope downward and outward, that is to say, their inner edges are higher than their outer edges. The action of the back teeth is that of a mill, in which the sharp surfaces of the upper and lower back teeth on each side of the mouth work laterally against each other, and thus grind the food which is brought between them by the tongue and cheeks.

As the lower jaw is narrower than the upper jaw, the horse can chew with his back teeth only on one side of his mouth at a time, which he often continues to do for even so long as an hour, without changing to the other side. A horse is unable to use his front teeth and his back teeth at the same time; for when he works his jaws laterally the front teeth of the lower jaw become separated from those of the upper jaw.

Each tooth is lodged in a socket of its jaw bone, and becomes developed from its dental pulp, which is provided with blood vessels, nerves and secreting cells. Owing to the continued secretion of dentine, the teeth are forced slowly out of their sockets, which movement more or less makes up for the wear entailed on the teeth by mastication.

Our own teeth, on the contrary, remain stationary in their sockets after they have attained their full size The greater amount of wear undergone by the back teeth of the horse is compensated for by the increasing obliquity of the incisors with age.

As the teeth wear down in time, the layers of enamel of both the front and back teeth gradually become thinner and weaker, until at last they disappear altogether, or fail to fulfill their purpose as cutting projections on the tables of the teeth. Hence, mastication becomes less perfect with age, and as the animal grows old, he becomes increasingly liable to indigestion from the faulty action of his teeth.

On an average, a horse takes about nine minutes to eat one pound of oats, and about twelve minutes to consume the same weight of hay.

While the food is being chewed, it becomes more or less mixed with saliva, which flows into the mouth from the salivary glands in response to the stimulus caused by the presence of the food, and which helps the animal to swallow. In horses, the chief source of saliva is the parotid glands, which are of greater comparative size in them than in all other animals except ruminants.

The saliva of the parotid glands consists of about 99.2 per cent. of water. Carpenter points out that the size of the parotid glands in animals is proportionate to the degree in which the mastication of their food is performed; and that these glands are absent in birds, which swallow their food whole.

Although dogs secrete saliva abundantly, starch is not a component of their natural food. As the requirements of the horse's digestion demands that he should thoroughly chew his food, we ought to give it to him in a condition that will induce him to eat slowly. Furthermore, the amount of saliva secreted during mastication is more or less proportionate to the dryness of the fodder; for the dryer it is the more saliva will the horse require to enable him to swallow it.

Saliva, being of an alkaline nature, aids the digestion of fat by forming it into an emulsion, in which the fat is split up into minute particles.

Saliva contains the ferment pytalin, which has the property of converting starch into sugar, in which form it is absorbed into the body. The action of the pytaline of the saliva on starch is of too brief duration to have much effect; for it ceases soon after the arrival of the food in the stomach, on account of the presence of acid in the gastric juices. The digestive changes which the food undergoes in the mouth therefore appear to be more mechanical than chemical.

Work Both Ways.

"The young men of the present day," said the elderly person, "have great advantages of the young men of my day, both in education and business training."

"But the trouble is," said the young man, "they have no advantage over one another."—Indianapolis Journal.

Red Lake Falls Gazette.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER
—BY—
PHIL. A. KAUFER.

Published weekly, Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls.

Subscription, $1.00 per Year

☞All matter for publication in THE GAZETTE must be handed in on or before Tuesday 6 p. m.

The Fosston Fair Association has decided on Sept. 27th, 28th and 29th as the dates for holding their fair.

The Democrats of Polk county have concluded to put a full ticket in the field and will indorse John Gleason, who is running as an independent.

A legal voter, to be entitled to the exercise of his franchise in Minnesota, must have been a resident of the state for six months, and of the precinct for thirty days.

Prof. Otto Lugger, State Entomologist, has issued a circular from the state experimental station in which he calls attention to the fact that there is danger that the two kinds of migratory locusts or grasshoppers now found in some parts of the state will greatly multiply. He says that the only effective remedy is to keep the eggs from hatching, and advises the plowing of the fields in which the eggs have been laid, thus covering them and preventing the young insects from reaching the surface. Eggs are laid during July and August and by fall or early spring plowing farmers can prevent the hatching of their destructive enemy. Where stubble fields are left unplowed, in each hundred acres enough grasshoppers can be raised to destroy the crops of many thousands of acres.

Census Supervisor Adams says: It is quite probable that by September 1 the census population of Minnesota may be given out. The Seventh district is going to show a good increase as a whole. The large cities like Crookston, Fergus Falls, Moorhead, Alexandria and Willmar, are going to disappoint the people. Estimates based on directory counts and school population have been altogether too high. The smaller villages show the largest gain. They have grown tremendously in the past ten years. The heavier and more thickly settled townships show very little increase. Farmers have moved into the villages, leaving the farm to the children, while the other children have gone into new country to get land. The number of farms has greatly increased, not only the tilling of new land, but through the dividing up of large farms. This district has all been settled since 1860, forty years; all north of the Northern Pacific since 1870. It has had its period of most rapid growth, and it cannot continue the percentage of gain which it has hitherto made.

Notice is hereby given that the People's Party Legislative Convention for the Representative district, composed of the counties of Red Lake and Beltrami, in the 61st Legislative District in Minnesota, will be held at the village of Bemidji, in said district on the 10th day of September, A.D. 1900, at 10 o'clock a. m, for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate for member of House of Representatives in the legislature of said state of Minnesota, and for the transaction of such other business that may come before the convention.

The County Conventions for the selection of delegates thereto will be held in the respective counties on the 8th day of September, A. D. 1900, at a place to be designated by the respective county committees in the several counties and the time for holding the primaries in the several precincts for the selection of delegates to the county delegate convention is hereby fixed at the hour between 7 and 8 o'clock p. m. on Wednesday, September 7th, A. D. 1900.

Each county in the district is to be entitled to one delegate for each 100 votes cast for B. Wethern in 1898 for Representative.

Upon the said basis of Representation the several counties of the district shall be entitled to the following number of delegates in said convention to-wit:

Red Lake	10
Beltrami	4

Dated at Red Lake Falls, Minn., this 8th day of August, 1900.

K. M. HANSEN,

S. A. SWANSON,

Inasmuch as Red Lake County delegates have already been chosen, there will be no legislative primaries nor delegate convention in Red Lake County.

If you toot your little toot, and lay aside your horn, there's not a soul in ten short days will know that you were born. The man who gathers pumpkins is the man who plows all day, and the man who keeps a pumpkin is the man who makes it pay. The man who advertises with a short and sudden jerk, is the man who blames the printer because it didn't work. The man who gets the business has a long and steady pull, and keeps the local papers for years and years quite full. He plans his advertisement in a clear and thoughtful way, and keeps forever at until he makes it pay.

Wilfrid Lemieux, of this city, heretofore a prominent Populist, has announced his conversion to Republicanism. Mr. Lemieux attended a meeting of the Populist county central committee at St. Hilaire this spring, on a proxy, was a delegate to the county convention at Thief River Falls, to the state convention at Minneapolis, and an alternate to the national covention.

VANDERBILT TO WED.

His Bride-to-Be Is Wealthy and of an Ancient Family.

An important society event at some still undeterminate date will be the marriage of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, head of the Vanderbilt millions, and Miss Elsie French, whose engagement was recently announced. Young Vanderbilt was born in 1877, and graduated from Yale in 1899. He was making a tour of the world, and had reached Japan when his father died. Returning home, he found that his father had passed by his eldest son, Cornelius J., and had left the entire fortune of $100,000,000 to himself. Very generously, however, Alfred Gwynne disregarded this arrangement, and turned over some $7,000,000 to his brother. This action was a noble one. A family feud over the distribution of the Vanderbilt interests would inevitably have affected many innocent persons who were interested in Venderbilt properties. It seemed proper and correct enough to settle all dispute by giving away a king's ransom, but how many young men are there just out of college who could have done it so quickly and so gracefully. Alfred Gwynne is a modest young man, and is said to have inherited the Vanderbilt genius for finance. Young Vanderbilt inherited the Vanderbilt millions in accordance with the traditions of the family. At the death of old Commodore Vanderbilt, the founder of the family, the bulk of his fortune passed to his son, William H. Vanderbilt, who was said to have inherited about $70,000,000 at the age of 56. When William H. Vanderbilt died he left the bulk of his fortune to his eldest son, Cornelius, who inherited about $80,000,000 at the age of 42. And now Alfred Gwynne has inherited $100,000,000 from his father, the latter cutting off the elder son because of his marriage, which displeased his father. His bride-to-be is a daughter of the late Ormond French, who was tenth in descent from Edward French, one of the founders of Ipswich, Mass., in 1636. She is an heiress in her own right, and is an athletic young women, with a fondness for sailing, riding, swimming and tennis. She was a playmate of her future husband in her childhood, and is 21 years old.

Wane of Chinese Exclusiveness.

The commencement of the establishment of the so-called "spheres of influence" in China was in 1897, when the Germans seized the Port of Kiau-Chau, on the east coast of Shantaung, and during the next month secured from the Chinese a lease for ninety-nine years of the town, harbor, and district. Two months later Russia got possession of Port Arthur and Tallenwan, with their adjacent waters, on a lease for twenty-five years, with the privilege of renewal. Within the boundaries of the leased territory, which are as yet undefined, Russia has supreme control. Port Arthur harbor and the lerger portion of the harbor Tallenwan are therefore closed to all except the war vessels of Russia and China. In June, 1898, Great Britain took possession of Wei-Hai-Wei and is to hold the port as long as Russia holds Port Arthur. Finally, the French in April, 1898, secured a "lease" of Kwang-Chau-Wan Bay, on the east coast of the Tien-Chau Peninsula.

Not Law, but Gospel.

Clergymen of the past often had traits of individuality which are perhaps not so common at the present day. Archbishop Sumner was once holding a confirmation in an English parish church, when he observed that a number of people were standing in the aisles, although several pews were empty. He stopped the service, and asked the reason. "The pews are private property," answered a man, "and they're shut up." "There can be no such thing," said the bishop, authoritatively. "Let the pews be opened." "We can't open 'em!" shouted some one. "They're locked." "Is there a locksmith here?" "Yes, my lord." "Very, well; let him remove the locks. A hymn shall be sung meanwhile." So the locks were removed, the audience seated itself, and the confirmation went on.—Youth's Companion.

Mad Dog's Viciousness.

Monroe (Ga.) Advertiser: A mad dog took in the community around Brent some weeks ago and bit four cows, all of which have since died from the rabies. Three of the cows belonged to two negroes named Battie and Maye, and one to Mr. A. J. Zellner and was a four-gallon cow valued at $30. While the dog was in the lot biting the cows his back was broken by the animals who were chasing around the place in mad confusion, and the owner of the cows hearing the noise hurried to the lot and killed the dog. Had not the cows disabled the dog by breaking his back, he might have escaped and bitten some one in the neighborhood, and it was indeed a narrow escape for the residents of that community.

Improved Radiator.

By the use of a new steam radiator attachment the air is drawn from the interior to admit more steam when the radiator cools, a thermostat being connected with a valve to open the exhaust outlet and allow the steam to flow in without regard to the other radiators on the circuit.

Increased cost of materials is assigned as the cause of New York city's decline in building. The first three months of 1899 permits taken out represented buildings to cost $38,000,000; the same time this year the amount was $16,000,000.

CHINA FOR PEACE

WANTS AN "IMMEDIATE CESSATION OF HOSTILITIES."

Earl Li Has Been Appointed as Envoy Plenipotentiary to Negotiate With the Powers—Minister Conger Expresses His Ability to "Hold On" Until Relief Comes—Sheng Expresses Grave Fears for Legationers When Defeated Chinese Troops Return to Capital.

Washington, Aug. 14.—Indications of the desire of China for a peaceful settlement of her present difficulties have been multiplying for several days. Official evidence of that desire was presented to the department of state yesterday. It was in the form of an edict promulgated by the emperor Kwang Hsu, appointing Earl Li Hung Chang as envoy plenipotentiary to negotiate with the powers for an "immediate cessation of hostilities" pending a solution of the problems which have grown out of the anti-foreign uprising in the empire. Earl Li is to act directly for the emperor, and a fair inference is that whatever terms of settlement he may reach with the powers will be approved by the imperial government.

Ability to "Hold On."

A belated message from Minister Conger was transmitted to the war department by Gen. Chaffee. It expressed simply his ability to "hold on" until Gen. Chaffee should come to his relief. All the power of this government will be exerted to get relief to him and the other imprisoned legationers at the earliest possible moment.

While it is conceded by the Washington officials that the conference of plenary authority upon Earl Li to negotiate with the powers for a settlement of existing troubles is a step in the right direction, it by no means is assured that the United States government will consent offhand to open negotiations with the distinguished viceroy. The demands of this government upon China have been made plainly and without equivocation. They cannot be misunderstood. Assuming that the Chinese government is acting in good faith, the demands are reasonable and can be complied with readily. As transmitted to the imperial government by the secretary of state through Minister Wu, the demands in brief were:

Our Government Demands.

"That the Chinese government give assurance that the foreign ministers are alive, and if so, in what condition; that the ministers be placed in free communication with their governments, firing upon the legations cease, and all danger to their lives and liberty be removed; that the imperial authorities place themselves in communication with the relief expedition, so that the legationers may be liberated, foreigners protected and order restored."

Until these demands have been acceded to it is highly improbable that the government of the United States, or any of the united powers, all of whom have made practically the same demands upon China, will consent to a "cessation of hostile demonstrations," which are being conducted, at least so far as this government is concerned, with the sole purpose of succoring the besieged legationers in the Chinese capital.

Reply of United States.

Last night Secretary Adee, by direction of President McKinley, presented to Minister Wu, for transmission to his government, the reply of the United States to the imperial edict appointing Li Hung Chang envoy to negotiate with the powers for a cessation of hostilities. The text of the reply will not be made public until to-day. In effect, however, it is a reiteration of the demands previously made by the United States upon China, coupled with a vigorous intimation that no negotiations will be entered into until the Chinese government shall have complied with those demands. This government, inspired by a determination to effect the rescue of the legationers besieged in Peking, takes advantage in its reply to the edict to reiterate the demands previously made upon China. These demands were first made by the president on July 23, and subsequently were reiterated substantially by Acting Secretary Adee, by direction of the president. The demands for the protection of the ministers, for free communication between their respective governments and for the restoration of order in China of the memorandum forwarded to the imperial government by the president yesterday. The iteration and reiteration of the demands must make it perfectly clear to the Chinese government, it is thought, that no negotiations will be entered upon until an entire compliance with them has been made. Should the demands be acceded to there will be no obstacle, it is believed in the way of a settlement of other questions which have arisen out of the pending troubles. Minister Wu declined to make any statement bearing on the reply, not even being willing to say whether or not it had been received by him. Copies have been sent to the United States representatives in Europe and Japan to be submitted to the governments at which they are stationed, and also to the European diplomats stationed here for their information.

Wu is Elated.

Mr. Wu, the Chinese minister here, is very much elated over the appointment of Li Hung Chang as a plenipotentiary to arrange peace with the powers. He sincerely hopes that it will be accepted by them, as the results attained, in his opinion, would be satisfactory to all concerned. "I think Earl Li's designation a capital one," he said. "Aside from the emperor and empress he is the highest official of the Chinese government, and he has the implicit confidence of all Chinamen. In many ways he is eminently qualified to act as an intermediary between his own government and the powers, which may be inclined to treat with him. He has done great work for China and I have great confidence in his wisdom and discretion."

Hart Would Get Out.

London, Aug. 14.—"The sooner we can be got out of this the better, for it is inconvenient for the Chinese government and unsafe for ourselves."

This is a message received last evening from Sir Robert Hart, dated Peking, Aug. 5, and sent in cipher to the Chinese maritime customs office in London. Commenting upon it the Morning Post says:

"It would seem to indicate that the Chinese government is anxious for the safety of the foreigners, or at least to get them safely out of Peking, while Sir Robert Hart evidently expects that they will get out sooner or later."

Sheng, director general of railways and telegraphs, according to a Shanghai dispatch to the Standard, expresses grave fears for the safety of the members of the legations when the defeated Chinese troops return to the capital.

Legations Not Besieged.

The Daily Mail publishes an interview with the Chinese minister in London, Sir Chih Chen Lo Feng Luh, quoting him as urging the foreign ministers to leave Peking. "Some people say," remarked Sir Chih Chen, "that the legations are still besieged. It is not so. When you are besieged you are not allowed communication with the outside world, but here you are receiving messages, cipher messages, from Sir Claude MacDonald."

Commenting upon the various propositions made by China to the powers, the Daily News well expresses the predominating British opinion as follows: "What the Chinese authorities say in effect is this: 'Stop your advance on Peking and we will give your ministers a safe conduct to Tien-tsin. If you do not at once instruct them to leave Peking we cannot answer for the consequences.' To this obvious and there can be but one answer. M. Delcasse has given it in very poignant terms. The ministers cannot leave except under absolutely convincing guarantees of safety. In the speedy advance of the allies lies the only real hope of saving the ministers."

In the same vein the Daily Telegraph says: "American statesmen take up what seems the only logical attitude when they tell Mr. Conger that they have never for a moment entertained the idea of his placing himself at the mercy of Chinese official pledge."

Inspect Expeditionary Corps.

Marseilles, Aug. 14.—President Loubet, accompanied by M. Delcasse, minister of war, and M. de Lanassan, minister of marine, arrived here yesterday morning at 9 o'clock and proceeded immediately to the reviewing ground, where they inspected the Chinese expeditionary corps. There was much enthusiasm.

CASE OF HOBSON'S CHOICE.

Constructor Wants to Go to China, but is Needed Elsewhere.

New York, Aug. 14.—Constructor Hobson has asked for the command of a marine detachment in China, and is ready, he says, to assume the duty at once, according to a dispatch to the Herald from Washington. Rear Admiral Remey has cabled that he is opposed to the detailing of Hobson for any such duty. He adds that if Constructor Hobson is able to undertake active work in the field he is in a position to return to Manila or Hongking, where the services of a constructor are required in making repair work. Hobson is still at the naval hospital in Yokohama under treatment for his eyes, and will probably return to this country.

SHOWS NERVE.

Boy's Limbs Severed by Train and He Examines Members.

Stevens Point, Wis., Aug. 14.—Martin, the sixteen-year-old son of John Huntzinger, was knocked off the side of a moving Wisconsin Central freight car by a switch stand. One leg was cut off, but the boy managed to hold on in some way for 150 feet farther, when the other leg was cut off. No one witnessed the accident. The boy dragged himself to the shade under a box car on the next track, where he was found five minutes later examining his wounded limbs. He called to another boy who happened to be passing and asked him to bring his severed legs from the other track, where they had been thrown by the wheels. His nerve was wonderful, but during the afternoon he collapsed from loss of blood and the shock and died.

William and Jennings weigh five pounds each, and Bryan tips the beam at five and one-half pounds.

Credit in America.

London, Aug. 14.—The Times, in a long editorial dealing with the economic position of the United States, as evidenced by the allotment of the war loan, traces the progress during the last few years of the reduction of the American debt, but says that the United States has not yet ceased to be a debtor nation. It refers to the abundance of credit in America, and says: "None could suit Americans better among non-American securities than the obligations of the British government."

UNCERTAIN TELEPHONES.

They Are Cheap in Switzerland But They Drive Strangers Mad.

"I noticed some reference in the paper the other day to the cheapness of telephone service in Switzerland," said a New Orleans broker recently returned from an extended visit abroad. "I can vouch for the fact that the tolls are very low, but the way the exchanges are run is well calculated to drive a man to drink. While I was at Berne last fall I desired to 'phone to a friend who was in a small village in the adjoining canton, although forty miles distant. I was told that I would find a public instrument at the post-office, and with a good deal of difficulty I located the 'bureau,' as they termed it, in a suite of rooms up stairs. A very military-looking old gentleman with a white moustache received me and listened politely to my request. It was then about ten in the morning, and he informed me with many apologies that I would have to call again, as the line was only open between two and four. I was annoyed, but presented myself on time, and was then put through a course of interrogations that reminded me of an application for life insurance.

"When I had satisfied the old gentleman that I was a harmless American crank, and that my intentions were strictly honorable, he called up the village exchange and directed them to send a messenger to the hotel after my friend. Another long wait ensued, and when the bell finally rang the manager had a mysterious confab in monosyllables with the other end of the line. 'I am very sorry,' he said at last, 'but your friend will not be permitted to use the telephone today; he has forgotten to bring his passport.' That was the last straw, and I—well, I said things, picturesque things, lurid things. The old gentleman told me it was necessary to observe precautions to prevent the service being used by military spies. I never got to talk with my friend, but learned that the charge would have been only four cents for three minutes."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

BLACK WALNUT GOES ABROAD.

States Along the Mississippi Are Searched for Fine Trees.

The great size often reached by the black walnut, the richness of the dark brown wood, the unique beauty of the grain sometimes found in burls, knots, feathers and in the curl of the roots, all conspire to make this the most choice and high-priced of our native woods.

Twenty-five years ago walnut was extensively used in the manufacture of fine furniture and finishings in this country, but manufacturers adroitly drew attention to the beauty of darkly stained quartered oak, and the use of the rarer wood has greatly declined.

But all this time the search for the fine black walnut logs has gone on systematically, though quietly, the trade attracting little attention, though the volume of lumber handled has been large.

The great source of supply has been the central portions of the Mississippi valley. The walnut is at home in the rich alluvial bottom lands of the western streams and in the stony limestone soils of the hills and mountains, and in such localities the buyers have left few trees unsurveyed.

Throughout eastern Kansas, Missouri and Arkansas, as well as the States along the Ohio and its tributaries, may be seen a few logs at this little station, a car or two at that, with carefully hewn sides and painted ends, ready for the market.

If you ask where this market is you will find that the great bulk of this rare lumber goes to Europe.

While we have been led into an enthusiastic admiration for fine oak, stained according to the degrees of antiquity it is supposed to represent, our European cousins have been paying fancy prices for the rich black walnut that we have allowed to go "out of the fashion."—Berea Quarterly.

The Stamp Question.

Meaning that she should purchase a few stamps ahead and not be bothering the druggist every day in the year, he said:

"Don't you know that a druggist doesn't like to sell stamps in that way?"

"Is it possible he is afraid I won't pay him?" she questioned spiritedly.

"Pay him?" he demanded. "What do you mean?"

"Why, I purchased four yesterday, and as I forgot my purse I asked him to charge them—the mean thing."

"Have mercy!" he cried. "Woman spare me any more!"—Indianapolis Sun.

A Question of Dignity.

"What makes you keep forever talking about humidity?" asked the irritable man. "You've used the word over and over again."

"I know it. You don't think I'd put off such a wonderful specimen of weather with a monosyllable like 'hot,' do you?"—Washington Star.

Justice.

"Judge, they are accusing you of favoring your friends and being too severe on your enemies when you get a chance at them."

"Oh, well, it will average up all right in the long run, so justice in the abstract is none the loser."—Indianapolis Journal.

SIGNS OF SPRING.

When springtime reigns the "season" wanes—
We weary ore of footlight fads,
We watch the growing of the grass
And put away the playhouse "ads."
Let young D'Artagnan fume and fight,
Let Cyrano woo maid and Mars,
We shall go out into the night,
Lit by the everlasting stars.

Now east and west and north and south,
Out come the graceful steeds of steel,
A flight a flash—perhaps a crash—
And, lo! the world is all a-wheel.
Over the hills and far away
A million riders seem to ply.
Nature receives her friends to-day,
And few there are to pass her by.

A trumpet blare, a spangle flare,
A brazen burst of horns and drums—
A mad excitement everywhere—
And, lo! the wondrous circus comes!
Oh, glittering adjunct of the spring,
Though every nation gives you praise
Your splendors do not seem to bring
The joy that thrilled our childish days!

Come out and walk, come out and run,
Come out and ride and scream and shout—
Come out and saunter in the sun.
If you do nothing else—come out.
There is a solace in the spring—
If you will walk in nature's wey
She'll gladly show you everthing,
And there will be no bill to pay!

AUNT CHARETTE.

They had raided Aunt Charette. In answer to repeated complaints from the respectable element in Fort Kent the officers had come up there and had swooped down on the liquor dealers. And chief among the liquor dealers was Aunt Charette. In fact, she was the local wholesaler. She was thrifty, was Aunt Charette. She had credit. She could roll $500 worth of "morson," or white rum, at one time. The smaller dealers up and down the St. John from St. Francis to Frenchville found it more convenient to buy of her.

Gold beads and a black silk dress o' Sunday did Aunt Charette wear. Broad was she, with amplitude of waist and scarcity of lap. She sat all day long in her little sitting room and interrupted her knitting only long enough to answer calls at the door. Sometimes the caller would be a man from Connor with gray wool trousers and peaked cap. Another would be a Frenchville citizen with empty jugs under the seat of his narrow buckboard.

They told her whether they wanted morson or cherry rum or "wheesk" or alcohol. Then Aunt Charette went out in the little dark leanto shed and rattled the funnel and clinked the jugs, and at last came pudging back with a broad smile between her big earrings.

And she always knew whether to give or refuse credit. All sorts of queer accounts had she—scattered all over the countryside.

Uncle Charette was a very silent partner in the firm. He used to tell the priest that he had tried and tried to induce Aunt Charette to give up the business of selling liquor. Still Uncle Charette had discovered years before that he would not have to go into the woods winters any more; that there was always spare change for him to buy his tobacco; that he was never asked to earn any money for the groceries. Twice a year Aunt Charette purchased new wool trousers of Canadian gray. As for his long-tailed coat, Uncle Charette seemed unable to wear that out for the reason that the most of the time he went about in his shirt sleeves.

And though Uncle Charette never went out into the dark leanto, still on a corner of the kitchen shelf stood a little earthen jug that Aunt Charette never allowed to be less than half full of brandy. She had to pour some into it from the keg every day. Uncle Charette declared that it helped his rheumatism.

When the officers came riding up to the door on a big sled drawn by two horses and ran in without knocking, Aunt Charette clung to the arms of her chair.

"Le bon Dieu! W'at ees eet?" she cried.

"Aunt Charette, you've been complained against," said the local deputy sheriff, "and we've got to take what stuff you've got on the premises. I suppose it's all in the leanto, as usual?"

When the discovery is made in prohibition Maine that there is liquor selling in a community the local deputy is usually well acquainted with the location of all the liquor deposits.

"W'at!" screamed Aunt Charette, but in sorrow, not in anger. "W'at! tak' ma leetle stock? Why, m'sieu, yo' can't do nottains lak dat. I geet ma pairmeer from dat man—w'at yo' call heem, de county attornee. Here—hare—here it be," and with trembling hand she poked under the deputy's nose the receipt showing that she had paid a fine at the last term of court. She insisted that it was a permit to sell liquor. Aunt Charette believed that it was.

"I hain't got anything to do with that," said the deputy. "I've got a search warrant, and I'm ordered to search and seize."

He ducked past and started for the leanto. And Aunt Charette, her keys jangling, her hands upraised, her tongue flying like a shuttle, followed on his heels. Uncle Charette sat wholly silent in a corner. The only sign of emotion he displayed was to blink every thirty seconds. So absolutely impassive was he that I, unseen, took his photograph in a twenty seconds' exposure and there wasn't a smooch on the negative.

Aunt Charette protested against opening the door. The deputy, with one blow of his boot, shattered the lock. Then he and his man rolled out the barrels and the kegs and the demijohns. Aunt Charette, as they laid their hands on each article, screamed, "Ah, mon Dieu! Non! non! You've taken enough! Leeve dat wan!—leeve dat wan!"

But the officers were inexorable. They rolled everything out. They had to send for another sled. There were loads for two heavy teams. The last man to go out was the deputy with a jug, the last he could find. He had dug out the remotest corner. As he went through the kitchen his eyes fell on the jug on the shelf. He took it down and smelled of it.

"Ah, offeecoire! offeecaire!" she wailed, "dat be just a little sup of brandy for poor M'sieu Charette, dat poor man dat set dere. Don' tak' dat!"

Uncle Charette, pulling at his pipe, only blinked an extra time or so.

"Eef yo' tak' dat, offeecaire, w'at da poor man do for hees dreenk to-morrow mornin'? Please leeve dat." The officer could appreciate the situation. He left it.

Aunt Charette stood at the door until the teams disappeared in the dusk far down the street.

A rough inventory at the storehouse that evening indicated that Aunt Charette had $700 worth of liquor in stock.

* * * * * *

The officers left word that Aunt Charette must be at the office of the local trial justice the next forenoon at 9.

At 8 o'clock Uncle Charette eased her down out of the old-fashioned chaise onto the platform before the justice's office. It was a slow and tedious job, for Aunt Charette's avoirdupois is disposed in most unwieldy fashion. She was arrayed in her best black dress. Uncle Charette—this being a state occasion—had on his long-tailed black coat. The faces of both were perfectly expressionless. Evidently Aunt Charette had exhausted all her emotion the afternoon before.

They sat side by side in the justice's office mute, never moving, never even turning their heads while all the other cases of seizure were disposed of.

It had been a wholesale raid through the village. All the men and women who had been raided owed money to Aunt Charette. All gave bonds to appear at the higher court. All went away.

"Well, Mrs. Charette," said the justice, "you are charged with single sale, with nuisance and keeping a tippling house. Have you any lawyer or any defense to put in?"

To the surprise of all Uncle Charette who had been all these years the silent partner in this firm, was the one to speak.

"She have no lawyer," said he; "she have notins to say."

"Well, I shall have to impose fines amounting to about $500 on her," said the justice. Aunt Charette gasped—that was all. Uncle Charette said nothing.

"You appeal, don't you?" asked the justice. "You know you can appeal and give bonds and then your wife won't have to go to jail. You will also have time to get money collected to pay the fine."

"We don't do nottins 'tall 'bout dat t'ing," said Uncle Charette doggedly.

"What, you don't mean to say that you are going to let your wife go down to jail?" cried the justice. "If she doesn't pay or give bonds she'll have to go to jail and await the sitting of the court. That is two months off. Then she will have still more time to serve in carrying out her sentence. She is likely to stay there the most of a year. Aunt Charette has been a good wife to you, Uncle Charett. Your home place stands in your name. All you have to do is to sign her bonds and then she can stay here till court sits. And by that time you will have a chance to talk this thing over with your friends. I'll make out the bond."

"No," declared Uncle Charette. "Ef yo' want to tak' her down to jail she go. She all dressed up. She go any time."

* * * * * *

Now, you and I and all the rest of us know that this isn't the way the prohibition statute usually operates—and it isn't the way the authorities like to have it operate. And then, too, here was an old woman, who had never been away from her home in all her life, who had grown-up children, who had knitted in that little kitchen there in the village of Fort Kent and had looked out through her little window at the passers until she had become one of the local landmarks. There wasn't a person in the village who wanted to see her go down to Houlton in that manner.

But there she and Uncle Charette sat without looking at each other. Every one knew that Aunt Charette had money enough to pay the fine. Uncle Charette's name on the bond would liberate her. Finally he said:

"She t'ink she hatter go. She'll be all r-r-et. I'll kip house till she com' back. We've talk 'bout det t'ing som', and we t'ink dat p'raps she hatter go down dere."

Well, under these circumstances the law had to take its course. The old couple shook hands on the platform outside the door. The husband got into the crazy chaise and rode away behind the fuzzy old white horse. The deputy sheriff, after great effort, boosted Aunt Charette in over the side of his piano-box buggy and started on the sixty-mile drive to Caribou, there to take the train for Houlton.—Lewiston Journal.

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

Chinese are dangerous enemies, for they are treacherous. That's why the Counterfeits of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve are dangerous. They look like DeWitt's, but instead of the all-healing witch hazel they all contain ingredients liable to irritate the skin and cause blood poisoning. For piles, injures and skin deseases use the original and genuine DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. W. A. Schreiter.

The wolf in the fable put on sheep's clothing because if he travels on his own reputation he couldn't accomplish his purpose. Counterfeiters of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve couldn't sell their worthless salves on their merits, so they put them in boxes and wrappers like DeWitt's. Look out for them. Take only DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. It cures piles and all skin diseases. W. A. Schreiter.

THE REDEMPTION OF RALPH MORTON

When Miss Amy Warden, only child of the wealthy broker, Anthony Warden, tripped into her father's office one December afternoon she was the embodiment of beautiful, healthful, 18. Nodding kindly toward the clerks, who had for a moment ceased their scribbling, she approached the door of her father's private office. A privileged character, as she well knew, turned the knob gently, intending to surprise him in the usual way.

As she peeped into the dimly lighted room she discovered at a glance that her father was not there; but his confidential clerk, Ralph Morton, a good-looking young man of twenty-five, was standing before the desk. For a space she was puzzled by the young man's peculiar actions—for he raised his hand twice to the side of his head, then, as if undecided, slowly lowered it again, and each time she caught the gleam of polished metal as it flashed in the rays from the electric bulb. Then, as if fully decided upon his action, he partly turned his face toward her; but she, noticing the tenseness of his white features, realized in a flash the awful import of his action, and darting across the room, snatched the deadly weapon from his hand and held it behind her. For a space he stood, regarding with wild eyes the beautiful, terrified face before him, then, uttering a low groan, he sank into a chair and hid his face in his hands.

She stood looking at him, the color gradually returning to her face; then she said, a wondering pity in her tone: "O, Mr. Morton, how could you think of such a thing?"

He slowly raised his head and met her pitying gaze wildly.

"Why, do you stop me, Miss Warden?" he said brokenly. "I am a thief! I caught the accursed fever of speculation and used your father's money. I prefer death to discovery and dishonor."

His eyes closed as if blinded by her accusing gaze.

"And do you imagine this will save you from dishonor?" she said, gently holding out the revolver. "O, Mr. Morton, do you not realize that it will only add to it? Will such an act restore my father's money or absolve you in the eyes of the world and—God?" Infinite pity shone in her eyes as she softly breathed the last word.

He did not look up, and she continued: "You are young and talented, Mr. Morton, perhaps above the average. The world is before you. Do you presume to dictate in this way to the tender mercy that has bestowed such priceless gifts upon you? My father may not overlook this, but there is one, at least, who will. How much money have you ta-ueed?" she concluded.

He threw out his hands despairingly. "More than I can pay," he faltered. "Two thousand dollars at least."

She remained silent so long that he ventured to look at her. She seemed to look beyond him, a smile like that of a pleased child on her now flushed face—the warmth of a high, noble resolve.

Your case requires no such desperate remedy as this," she said, turning her face a little from the growing eagerness of his gaze. "Supposing that I—I replace this money, would—"

He sprang to his feet. No, Miss Warden, he cried, entreatingly. "You must not think of such a thing. I have sinned; I must suffer."

"You must do as I say, Mr. Morton," she firmly replied. "My father, I know, would not forgive you; but that is no reason for sacrificing your future career. Besides, you can repay me some day."

He regarded her through a mist of tears, then held out his hand. "I will accept your offer, Miss Warden—the offer of an angel," he said huskily. "But I must leave this place and redeem myself among a strange people."

She started a little, but, laying her soft hand in his, whispered: "It may be for the best; but, wherever you go, God be with you," and she left him.

Five years had passed by when Ralph Morton again entered the city of his past folly. He did not bring the proverbial fortune, but he had amassed a competence which many less fortunate might envy.

During all this time he had never forgotten the sweet-faced young girl—his savior. Thrice had he written to her, but no answer came; and now when he went to the old office, he was told that Anthony Warden had failed three years previously and had died, leaving his daughter penniless.

He determined to find her if money, backed by love, could do so; but all search was unavailing. She had disappeared, like many unfortunates, into that mysterious realm where despair, perhaps, is the larger portion.

"You will find her yet, Ralph," said his friend, Dr. Banks, to whom Ralph Morton had confided his story. It was a bleak winter evening, and they were on their way to the doctor's house.

"Heaven will surely guide me to her," answered Ralph.

As they turned into a side street a young woman a short distance ahead stopped and uttered a low cry. A drunken ruffian had barred her path. He had already grasped her arm when Morton, running forward, planted a well-directed blow that sent him reeling. Ralph caught the young woman, half fainting, in his arms; then, as the doctor hurried up, he turned her face to the light. It was a thin, pale face, though beautiful—a beauty matured by days of struggle and sorrow.

Ralph Morton almost dropped the light burden, as he gasped: "It is she—Amy! O, Fred, thank heaven I have found her at last!"

It was in the doctor's cozy house, after he and his wife left them alone, that he said: "You were my guardian angel once, Amy; will you continue to be such? The debt I owe you can only be repaid with a life's devotion. Will you accept it, dearest?"

And she whispered: "I believe I loved you then, Ralph; at least I was sorry to have you go."—Boston Post.

Tiny Volcanoes in California.

Not far from Laytonville, Cal., a six-acre patch of ground has raised a crop of little volcanoes. A few nights ago a tremendous rumbling and roaring drew attention to the fact that 25 spouters had broken loose on the side of the mountain, each resembling a volcano in shape, with the characteristic crater, and from each crater gushed mud and warm vapor. Each "volcano" was about five feet high and the liquid mud, steaming and sputtering, was thrown to a height of 25 feet and ran down the sides of the little hills like streams of lava. Great crowds of people hurried to the place, and for hours sat on the mountain side and watched the phenomenon.

In a Roundabout Way.

The statement is made on the authority of one of our South American consuls that nearly all the hams imported into Brazil are of American origin, but were first exported to England and there packed by English dealers in accordance with Brazilian requirements and reshipped across the Atlantic to Brazil. This accounts for the fact that Brazil imported from this country directly only 38 packages of hams in 1897.

SCHOOL MATTERS.

The Board of Education Held Two Meetings This Week—Vacancies in the Corps and Board Filled.

A meeting of the Board of Education was held Monday night. The following teachers were employed:

High School Principal, HarrietteS. Brown, Minneapolis.

Grammar Room teacher, Otilia Dahlgren, Anoka.

Lower Grades, Mary J. Fahy, Hastings; Nettie Carley, Little Falls; Olive Renquist, Cannon Falls; Emily Benedict, Minneapolis; Theresa Conoven, New Brighton.

The above were selected from sixty applicants and come strongly recommended. Miss Brown is a graduate of the University of Minnesota. and has had two years' successful experience in High School work at Brown's Valley, Minn. Miss Dahlgren holds an advanced Normal diploma and first grade state certificate and has been teaching one of the grammar rooms at Marshall, Minn., for the past three years. The others are all High School and advanced Normal graduates except one, who has studied for two years at the State University. and all have had successful experience. Miss Brown's salary is $60 per month: Miss Dahlgren's $50 per month and the others will receive $40 per month.

The resignations of Fred Krueger and Isaie Marchildon as members of the Board were accepted, and V. L. Knight and EuzebNormandeau were elected to fill the vacancies.

Besides the above teachers and the Superintendent, there are four others who were engaged at the April meeting—Veronica Luseby, a graduate of the Ann Arbor University. as assistant principal: Mrs. J. J. Doe, and the Misses Costello and Van Etten.

A supplementary meeting was held at the schoolhouse Tuesday night at which it was decided to fix up the attick of the new building for use as a laboratory, and work will be begun on this at once.

E. A. Mosseau Insane.

E. A. Mousseau was brought to the city from St. Hilaire Monday by his mother, and the following morning proceedings were instituted in probate court for his commitment for insanity. For the past three weeks he has been tearing up his clothing and stuffing the pieces into the stove, whipping his relatives with his cane and otherwise showing severe mental derangement. After due medical examination, he was adjudged insane, and was taken to Fergus Falls on Tuesday. Mousseau has been a cripple since he was seven years of age, and has been making his living as a bootblack. He is now thirty five years old, and has been married. His wife died some years ago.

New Church at St Hilaire.

The Catholics of St. Hilaire, assisted by their Protestant friends, have just erected a splendid church edifice, with a fine stone foundation, and held services therein for the first time last Sunday. Rev. Fr. Ansgar officiated, while the choir of St. Mary's church, of this city, rendered the music. The trustees of the congregation are M. McAndres, Isaac LaJesse, and E. Carle, all hustlers. Mr. and Mrs. McAndres entertained the members of the choir at the Markham, and it is needless to say that the treatment accorded was right royal, as these good people have long since established an enviable reputation for hospitality of the generour kind.

Sad Intelligence.

The Rev. S. J. S. Moore last week received the sad news of the death of his sister, Miss Mary Moore, who died at the old home in Cambridge, O., Monday. Only a few months ago and since his location here, he was called upon to mourn the death of his father, who lived at the same place. He has the sympathy of the community in his bereavement.

Death of a Prominent St. Hilaire Citizen.

Peter Hall, the St. Hilaire merchant, and one of the pioneer citizens of that village, died at the Riverside hospital, Crookston, Monday morning, of typhoid fever. Deceased is the father of Martin Hall, who died of the same disease at St. Hilaire a month ago.

Birthday Party.

Miss Lorena Schreiter celebrated her eighteenth birthday anniversary Saturday, by inviting about fifty of her young lady and gentlemen friends for the evening. Interesting games, such as authors' riddles, and the writing of resolutions by the guests. social converse, vocal and instrumental music filled the evening with pleasure. An elaborate lunch was served at a seasonable hour. The lawn was beautifully illuminated with Japanese lanterns, and strung with hammocks, while the interior of the residence showed artistic decorations with plants and flowers. Miss Lorena had prizes for the successful ones in the different contests. Miss Katie McNerthney scored in the Authors' contest, receiving two volumes of Prescott's Peru; Dr. Argue wrote the most taking set of resolutions, and received as a reward a hand mirror. The booby prizes went to Miss Albina Lemieux and Ralph Wyer. Many beautiful gifts were left as tokens of the high esteem in which the hostess is held by her friends.

Labor Day Proclamation.

Governor Lind, following custom, has set aside Monday, September 3d, as labor day. In setting aside the day for toilers he says:

> "I believe it the aim of the legislature in setting aside Labor Day as a legal holiday, to secure to those employed in industrial pursuits not only a respite from toil and the opportunity to enjoy the rest and recreation incident to an outing at this favorable season of the year, but likewise to afford an opportunity for the establishment of more cordial relations and an interchange of views between employers and employes and for the discussion of questions of mutual interest to both and to society. To the end that these aims may be attained I earnestly urge upon the people of the state a due observance of Labor day in that spirit and according to law."

The Ossified Man.

The ossified man freak exhibited here Tuesday. Many were under the impression that this was a fake, but they are entirely mistaken in this. He is simply a wonderful freak of nature. A man weighing forty pounds, and unable to move any portion of his body except his left arm, shoulder, and his fingers Laying on his right side, he has not, for thirty-five years changed this position nor even so much as raised his head from the pillow. All his joints are stiff and immovable. Yet his vital organs are in perfect condition, and his mind is clear, as evinced by his intelligent conversation. He will be exhibited at the state fair and all who can should see him.

Will Ask Damages.

When John F. Doyle, of Garnes, was in the city Monday. he consulted a lawyer in regard to the damages done to the hay of settlers along the Clearwater river in his neighborhood, by flooding, occasioned by the log jambs in the big drive of Lammers Bros. Mr. Doyle represented settlers who were damaged as follows:

J. F. Doyle, twenty tons; Geo. Madden, 20 tons, which he had just purchased from the Indians; Ed. Juneau, 20 tons in stack, which stood in water four feet deep; Geo. Gunderson, 15 tons in stack; John Dempsey, 75 to 100 tons ruined in the meadow; Miss Dempsey, 50 tons; John Larson, 75 tons in stack; Eithier Bros., 50 tons partly stacked. The value of the hay is $3.50 in stack.

Beware of a Swindle.

We have been advised on good authority that there are men going through the country, driving, that represent themselves as agents for a medical institute in South Dakota. They go singly and represent that they will give treatment for catarrh and other head troubles at so much a month, etc., etc., but they expect you to sign a note, of anywhere from $20 to $50. Don't do it. They are simply swindling you out of your hard earned money. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Never sign notes for strangers under any circumstances, unless you have value received at the time.

World's Largest Cities.

The official census figures place Chicago fifth among the cities of the world. London ranks first with an estimated population of 6,528,434; New York second with 3,437,202 by the new census; Paris third with 2,536,834 by the census of 1896, and Berlin fourth with 1,677,394 in 1895.

UNION LAND AND INVESTMENT CO.

Will be Incorporated Under the Laws of the State and do Business in Red Lake Falls.

Allen W. Wood, secretary of the Clay County Investment Company, of Barnesville, and P. B. Goss, of Armstrong, Iowa, are organizing a company whose headquarters is to be at Red Lake Falls, and whose business it will be to deal in lands and realestate and loans. The gentlemen have decided to name the enterprise the Union Land and Investment Company, if they find no other company in the state has already assumed that title. Mr. Wood, accompanied by his wife, was in the city yesterday, and says the firm will be ready for business about the first of September. Mr. Goss will be the resident manager, while Mr. Wood will open an office at Crookston.

The gentlemen say that the Great Northern railroad officials have given them assurances that the road will be extended south from this city at no far distant day, to connect with the main line.

Lying for Effect?---A $1225 Lie.

Coiled up innocently among the locals in last week's Courier, like a snake in the grass, appeared the following item:

> Suit has been begun by Philip Chayer and J. A. Bray against J. A Duffy, Phil Kaufer, W. T. Spillane, Adam Schmitz and Fred Krueger for damages arising from the crushing of goods by the falling of the fire wall which collapsed last spring. Chayer claims $800 and Bray $350. The case will be tried in the District Court during the October term.

One of the editors of the Courier is attorney for Bray, and therefore knew that the statements above are barefaced lies. In fact, the item turns out to be a $1225 lie, evidently for the purpose of prejudicing public opinion into the belief that a demand was being made less unreasonable than the facts show. Bray is suing for $1025 damages, and Chayer for $1350. If the Courier is not lying for effect in this case, what is it doing. and why did it state that Bray's claim was $350 when one of its editors, as Bray's attorney, had made and had served papers demanding $1025?

Runaways.

Just what caused the epidemic of runaways last Friday and Saturday will remain a mystery. Friday night as Chas. N. Bourdon was returning home from a trip to Garnes, with his daughters Ethe and Hazel, the tongue broke as the team was decending the west approach of the Clearwater bridge in this city, and the horses ran away. Before reaching Main street the broken tongue stuck in the ground, and the buggy turned a complete summersault, landing on its wheels. Fortunately none of the occupants were seriously injured, although Hazel was found under the buggy unconscious.

Saturday, Geo. Schinck's team, drawing a water tank ran down main street. The driver was thrown off. but an eight-year-old boy was left clinging to the tank, until the whole thing ran into Schmitz Bros.' team. and then overturned the tank, and mixed the horses up into their harness so that they had to stop. The Schmitz Bros. team. however. started to run. until they were stopped by contact with an electric light post, throwing John Schmitz to the ground.

The same afternoon Mrs. Ed. Enright, while driving home. was overtaken by a runaway team, and in the mixup sustained injuries which at first were thought serious. but from which she will speedily recover.

FIGHTING IN PEKING

ALLIES ARE BOMBARDING THE INNER CITY.

Startling Statement Made in a Dispatch From Admiral Remey—First Official Confirmation of the Fall of Peking Is Received From Gen. Chaffee—Dowager Empress Is Detained in the Inner City—Chinese Evidently Resolved to Make a Last Stand in the Ancient Capital.

Washington, Aug. 21. — From Gen. Chaffee yesterday the war department received official confirmation of the fall of Peking and the rescue of the besieged legationers. The dispatch of the American commander was not long and contained few details, but the unconcealed satisfaction with which it was received by officials of the administration indicated clearly the anxiety that had been engendered by his prolonged silence. His last communication to the government prior to the receipt of yesterday's advices, was dated Aug. 11 at Matow, almost thirty miles from Peking. The explanation of is suggested in advices received by the navy department from Admiral Remey, who, telegraphing from Taku on the 18th, says the telegraph line between that point and Peking is interrupted. The cablegram from Admiral Remey contains some important information not mentioned by Chaffee. He makes the startling statement, on Japanese authority, that the inner city of Peking was being bombarded by the allied forces. Admiral Remey says also that the dowager empress is detained in the inner city by Prince Yungedo. Advices received Saturday night from the foreign office at Tokio, Japan, by the Japanese legation in this city

Confirm and Amplify

previous accounts of the capture of Peking by the allied troops. Following is the text of the dispatch from Gen. Chaffee, as made public by the war department:

"We entered legation grounds at 5 o'clock last night (14th) with Fourteenth and light battery. Eight wounded during day's fighting; otherwise all well. —Chaffee."

The dispatch was received during the morning and was transmitted immediately to the president at the White House. He expressed his gratification at the news contained, particularly at the

Small Loss Sustained

by the American troops. It will be noted that the dispatch indicates the American troops entered the legation grounds at 5 o'clock on the evening of the 14th inst. By the Washington officials and by the several legation officials to whom it was shown, the date of Gen. Chaffee's communication is regarded as an error of transmission. It is believed that the word "fifteenth" should be "sixteenth." All previous advices, official and unofficial, have indicated that the legations were relieved on the evening of the 15th, Wednesday, after a day of sharp fighting. Minister Wu, the Chinese representative, and Minister Takahira of Japan on this point, all their official advices being that the entrance to the city of Peking was effected early in the evening of Wednesday, the 15th inst. The fact that only eight of the American force were wounded, none being killed, is regarded as notably fortunate. Admiral Remy's dispatch, which contains much information in a few words, is as follows:

Were Quite Positive

"Chefu, (no date)—Bureau of Navigation, Washington: 'Taku, 18th.—Telegraph line to Peking interrupted. Information, Japanese sources, empress dowager detained by Prince Yungedo, inner city, which is being bombarded by allies. Chaffee reports evening 14th. Eight wounded during day's fighting; otherwise all well. —"Remey."

Entered Legation Grounds

The startling feature of the dispatch is that fighting within the city of Peking was continuing, according to the advices of Admiral Remey. The inner, or, as it is popularly known, the forbidden city, evidently had not been taken. Prior to the receipt of the dispatch it was accepted generally as a fact that the dowager empress, in company with the emperor and a large suite, had left Peking. While nothing is said in Admiral Remey's dispatches as to the whereabouts of the emperor, it is deemed

Scarcely Probable

that he left the city without the empress dowager.. Some doubt of the accuracy of the information received by Admiral Remey is expressed, particularly as the Chinese minister, Wu, is very positive that the emperor, empress dowager and the entire Chinese court left Peking before the arrival at the gates of the allies. Late Saturday night the Japanese minister, Takahiri, received the following advices from the Japanese foreign office at Tokio: "The Japanese consul at Chefu wired, under date Aug. 17, to the following effect: 'The foreign forces attacked on the eastern side of Peking Wednesday morning. The enemy

Obstinately Resisted.

In the evening the Japanese blew up the Chiao-Yang gate and the Tung Chih gate of the Tartar city and succeeded in entering. In the meantime other foreign forces entered the Chinese city by the Tung Pien gate. Detachments were sent out immediately to the legations and opened communications. The ministers and staffs were found safe. The Japanese loss was over 100, including three officers, namely, Capt. Michiiye and Lieut. Watanabe, wounded, while Lieut. Yazaki was killed. The Chinese loss computed at about 400.' "

LOOKS MORE SERIOUS.

Fighting in Peking Puts a More Serious Aspect on Chinese Affairs.

London, Aug. 21. — Rear Admiral Bruce cables the admiralty from Chefu, Aug. 19, as follows:

"Am informed on the authority of the Japanese that street fighting still continues in Peking, part of which is on fire. Yang Sa (?) prevented the empress from leaving; and a last stand is now being made in the inner city, which is surrounded by the allies and being bombarded."

Rear Admiral Bruce's report of the continuation of fighting in Peking puts a more serious aspect on the Chinese situation than was generally expected here. It appears effectually to dispose of all statements that the empress dowager had fled, although circumstantial accounts of her departure continue to come from Shanghai.

Despite defeat the Chinese are apparently resolved to make a desperate struggle not only in their ancient capital, but also in other parts of the empire. Shang Chi Tung, viceroy at Hankow, and Liu Kun Yi, viceroy at Nanking, according to advices from Shanghai, have threatened the consuls, saying that if the person of the empress dowager is not respected they will withdraw from their present friendly attitude.

Another Shanghai dispatch announces the death of Li Ping Hong, Cheng and Chang Lui Lin in the fighting before Peking.

The mandarins in the southern provinces, according to a dispatch to the Daily Express from Hongkong, have issued an important proclamation recognizing the capture of Peking as a just punishment of reactionary officials and warning the people not to interfere with the foreigners, but also pointing out that the sole object of the powers should be punishment of the "Boxer" and then the restoration of peace, confining, however, their operations to the north.

He declares that all burghers in districts occupied by the British, except those who take the oath will be regarded as prisoners of war and transported, and that buildings on farms where the enemy or his scouts are harbored, will be liable to be razed.

Second Attempt Made on the Life of the Persian Ruler.

Paris, Aug. 21. — The Siecle says a private telegram from Ostend states that an attack similar in all points to that made by the anarchist in Paris on Aug. 2 was made Saturday on the shah of Persia. Details of the assault are lacking. The Echo de Paris publishes the bare statement from Ostend that an attempt had been made upon the life of the shah, adding that owing to the lateness of the hour it was impossible to obtain confirmation of the report.

BASED ON NOTHING.

Most of the Fears That Beset Fair Maids and Matrons.

The cause that implants the spirit of fear in the bosom of the gentle sex is a subject that may well puzzle the most devout student of human nature. The mouse is considered one of the harmless of creatures, and yet it has been responsible for more cases of hysteria than any animal many times its size.

One woman, who all her life has searched beneath her bed before retiring, at one time found herself in possession of a folding monstrosity, the intricacies of which she had first to solve before taking her well-earned rest. But such is the force of habit. After pulling down the bed she would carefully look beneath it, for no other reason than that she had done so ever since she was a child.

A favorite illusion is that of having one's legs seized, either from behind in going upstairs or on getting into bed. Women have been seen scuttling upstairs in the dark setting at defiance all the laws of locomotion in a ludicrous attempt to keep their legs some distance ahead of them and beyond the reach of a mysterious clutch. Girls will also make flying leaps into bed to eliminate the same improbability.

Many women search diligently in closets, bureau drawers and all sorts of impossible places before resigning themselves to sleep. An old housekeeper whose table silver, in two baskets, was always placed in her bedroom after the evening meal, was one night awakened by what she considered suspicious sounds from the lower regions. Cautiously leaving her room laden with the silver, she pitched both baskets into the hall below, calling out as she did so, "Take it all and please go," then fled precipitately and barricaded herself in her room. Needless to add, she found both baskets and scattered contents the following morning, a little the worse for the rough handling she had given them.

WORKERS AMONG COTTONSEED.

New Machine Which Is Designed to Monopolized Their Business.

An always interesting sight to New Orleans visitors has been the large gangs of darkies unloading cotton seed from the barges at the oil mills, piling the sacks of seed on the heavy trucks and trundling them down the wharf into the mill, singing lustily the while. The picturesque side of the old-time method of unloading seed by no means appeals to the owners of the mills, however. Such labor is very expensive, and sometimes impossible to obtain. Competition in the manufacture of cottonseed products is very keen, and unnecessary handling of the raw material must be done away with wherever practicable. The big grain elevators, built right up to the deep water, have long ago solved the problem, but with the oil mills at Gretna, built back of the levee, with their wharves stretching a considerable distance into the river, and with these wharves sinking and twisting all the time from the action of the current and the treacherous river bed, the question how to unload their barge and carry the seed back into the mills at a low cost has been until now a very difficult one to answer.

The Union Mill Company has recently installed at its large Crescent mill at Gretna a plant for rapidly and economically unloading seed from barges, which seems to meet all the conditions. The main part of the system is a belt conveyor, running on trestle work along the wharf, and thence under the roof of the mill. Along this conveyor the seed is carried from the end of the wharf, 250 feet to a point in the mill, where it is weighed and either stored or distributed direct to the crushers. From the time it is taken from the barges until it leaves the mill as a finished product the seed is not touched by hand.

The present capacity of the plant is about 4,700 bushels (seventy tons) of cottonseed per hour, but this can be largely increased. It is estimated that the construction will pay for itself in wages saved in less than two seasons

Saved From Prison by His Ears.

"I don't often see a thief or a bad man with big ears," said Judge Wofford from the bench in commenting on the physiognomy of Gilbert Closser, a 15-year-old boy charged with assaulting Frederick E. Moses. "I like to see a boy with big ears." The boy scarcely knew whether the Judge was sarcastic or sincere, and he fumbled his cap bashfully while his ears turned red.

The spectators tittered, but Judge Wofford continued sternly: "I am inclined to give you a chance, my boy, on the strength of your big mouth and generous ears. You've got a good face. A man with little ears, like a fox's or a squirrels, won't always do. They need watching." After warning Closser never to carry knives or revolvers Judge Wafford sentenced the boy to the reform school and then paroled him with instructions to report to the court January 1.—Kansas City Journal.

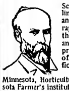
THE FARMER'S GARDEN.



Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

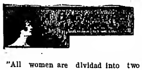
CASTORIA.
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. The Kind You Have Always Bought



"All women are divided into two classes, either designing adventuresses or simpering dolts. As for me," quoth Halbert, cynically, "give me the first every time. You can trust to an adventuress to have a little gray matter at least in her cranium." He was talking to his secretary, young Allen, a callow youth, almost effeminate, but nevertheless brainy, too brainy, as Halbert expressed it, for his size and weight. Allen had gotten used to these sinister observations concerning womankind, and rarely ever offered any comment either to agree or to refute the other's statements. These two individuals were a study for one another. The hour in which Allen accepted the position of private secretary, a short time before, they found a pleasant communion of tastes and ideas and a peculiar inexplicable sympathy of feeling that seemed to have puzzled both.

Halbert was a confirmed bachelor; he boasted of never having proposed to any woman; he was afraid of them; in his estimation they were all scheming politicians and ready to marry him or any man at a moment's notice. "Keep the women away from me," snarled Halbert at times when driven by force to a crush. "I'd rather smoke or sleep." And the little secretary with his strong, boyish ardor kept them far away and comforted Halbert with his companionable silence.

The one measure in Allen's make-up which Halbert could not understand was his reluctance to smoke. He could never get him to indulge even in a cigaret. And in the matter of drinking, though Allen could mix a punch or a cocktail with commendable art, he brought them untasted to Halbert as a kind of offering to that exalted wretch.

"You should have been a woman, by gad," Halbert said once to him. "A thousand pardons, Allen, but you would have made a fine girl. You've got grace and tact enough for it, you know. Why, believe me, Allen, if there were women like you today, with the brain and all, I believe I'd marry one of them." Allen actually blushed and retreated in confusion. Halbert liked this display of apparent shyness, and his affection for the boy grew. He liked to slap him on the back and he said he felt lonesome when the chap was away. "I tell you what, Allen, I don't know whether to adopt you as my son, considering the fact that I shall never have one of my own, or whether to let things slide on as formerly and just double your salary."

Things slid on as formerly until Halbert announced a hunting trip to Abyssinia. He had actually completed plans for both and was sketching out in his imagination the delicious comraderie of two in a tent in the wilds of Africa when Allen announced his intention to resign.

"You ungrateful beggar, you can't resign," Halbert shouted. "Why, my boy, I can't go without you. What's the matter?"

"The fact of the matter is, sir," Allen replied, respectfully, "I don't want to go with you."

It was a blow, and it landed between Halbert's eyes. He loved Allen, if he ever loved any being on earth, and this was the first time that he ever had been thwarted. Not given to sentiment or pleading, he nursed his agony silently—for Allen's abruptness stung him with all the agony of unfilial ingratitude, or unrequited love, of treachery in a friend—everything. It pained Halbert as he had never been pained before. That afternoon he ordered his horse for a long ride and went out dejectedly with a load on his shoulders. He wanted to puzzle out the situation He had never to plead with any one before in his life for what he wanted—and he hated to plead now. It might seem unmanly, he feared. He went out without calling to Allen, and he did not return for dinner.

The secretary in the meantime felt an unhappy sinking of his heart as the hours dragged by and Halbert did not return. It was his custom at least to return to dress for the evening, especially if he meant to dine out, and his continued absence made Allen uneasy. He did not know whether Halbert cared about his refusal to accompany him, but he knew that he himself cared, yet he felt that he could not acquaint his friend with the real reason until he had actually gone.

At 9 o'clock Halbert came back—not exactly on a stretcher, but leaning on the arm of his valet. He had had a bad fall somewhere on the riverside drive, and had turned his elbow badly—sprained it, in fact. They had actually subjected him to the annoyance of carrying him to a hospital because he had been too dazed to remonstrate, and when his mind was eventually clear he demanded removal to his own rooms.

His valet settled him comfortably on a divan and had left the room when Halbert sank into a slight slumber. In a few moments Allen came in, white, haggard, limp with anxiety, and stood there looking at Halbert with startled pain in his gaze. Then, with a sudden, incontrollable impulse, he knelt down beside the divan for a moment and, grasping one of the sufferer's hands in his own, crushed it to his lips with a sob of distress and pain.

Halbert opened his eyes and turned to look at him. He was almost too dumfounded to speak. Allen got up in confusion, and Halbert kept smiling and staring at him in a riot of bewildered ideas, groping as he did in a queer labyrinth of uncertainties, like a man struggling to face some peculiar situation that his mind refused to grasp.

"I trust you will pardon my intrusion," Allen said, standing by a window and looking out into the night, "but they told me you had been seriously hurt, and—and—it almost broke my heart."

Halbert sat up on the edge of the divan, and, drawing his dressing gown around him closely, remained there, looking at Allen like one surprised in half toilet and somewhat nervous because of it. The kiss of the youth burned still in the flesh of his hand, and it traveled along the channels of feeling and warmed his heart.

Something was groping in his mind for recognition. He still stared at Allen and took in, with careful, scrutinizing gaze, the supple lines of his tall, slender figure, the curves of his long neck, the slender hands and feet.

"Allen," Halbert said, and he got up and walked close to the youth and stood near him, his eyes still searching the boyish face, "Allen, I want to ask you a question. In God's name, don't be offended if I am wrong. But I don't think I am wrong. It never occurred to me before, but I am a blind fool, and it unnerves me. Look at me, Allen, and answer this: Are you a woman?"

Allen winced and turned farther away and leaned against a table as if to steady himself. The young face was seamed with pain. There was a long silence as Halbert waited for the other to speak. "You are a woman," he repeated.

"Yes, I am a woman." The words came at last, firmly, almost defiantly, like thunder in Halbert's ears, stunning him.

"My God!" was all that came from between the parted, eager lips of the other. "But this costume—why this? I don't understand."

"Because everybody has a prejudice against petticoats in the professions," the girl answered, "and I was bound I would not let that interfere with my progress. Why should I be bowed down, tied like a slave, because of a mere selfish, unreasonable prejudice?" The color burned in her cheeks brilliantly, and Halbert stepped toward her with a sudden, quick movement, his arms outstretched, love on his tongue, in his eyes, in his gestures.

The girl stepped away from him as he would have touched her arm.

"Mr. Halbert," she said, with dignity, "I am your secretary, and in your rooms, and you have discovered that I am a woman. Please respect my unhappy position, for I want you to believe that I am neither a designing adventuress nor a simpering dolt. There is another class that you seem to be unacquainted with—that you do not seem to take into consideration." She looked at him steadily, her eyes burning with determination.

Halbert's head sank under the siege of her look. Her speech hurt him; it crushed him. Yes, he loved this girl; he understood it now. He had been a blind, self-absorbed fool.

"Girl,: don't crush me under your heel." He had not thought that there could be lack of respect where love dwelt.

"While I am your secretary you must not speak of love. It is an unfair advantage."

"Then I discharge you this moment," cried Halbert, aroused. The girl could scarcely suppress a smile, though she struggled to be adamant. She turned and walked quickly toward the door.

"Come back, girlie; don't go and leave me like this. You've wound yourself all around my heart with a million tendrils. I can't let you go now—I want you to be my wife. Don't you love me? You won't go away now, when I want you most!"

She turned and smiled at him. He was pleading in abject humility. "Don't you love me?" he cried out to her—he, Halbert, the cynic—conquered!

"Well—yes," she called back, "I think I do." She was laughing, but her kiss was there on his hand still. He knew.

"Then you will go to Abyssinia after all, won't you—dear?"

Her laughter still greeted him from a distance, and he flung himself back on the divan and gave himself up to dreams such as never before thawed the chilly exterior of the man who had fled from petticoats and hid from them in smoking-rooms for the last twenty-five years. Halbert was overcome, in love like a schoolboy, his heart fluttering, buoyant, ecstatic. And the kiss was there on his hand. He carried it to his lips and drank the honey of the spot where her own lips had been.—Chicago Tribune.

Life is a struggle in which everybody tries to get what he wants and to forget what he deserves.

CAGED BEAUTIES.

Exposed for Sale to the Passer-By in an Algerian Town.

Mr. William Shark describes in London Literature a visit, while in Algeria, to a street of caged women. It seems it is forbidden to Europeans after dark, but he wandered in, partly through incident, partly through curiosity. He writes:

"Some women were in barred rooms and some in cages, offered for sale.

"The woman in the first cage I passed was rather pretty, and, though her hair was dark, she had pale blue eyes. Her long, loose tresses were everywhere clasped with little blue brooches, and I noticed that her lips, the end of her ears and her finger tips were stained a dull red. She accosted me in Moorish-French, and asked me if I would not like to take her away from these jackals of Moors and Arabs. I said I was a stranger, a wayfarer, and if here today might be far to-morrow. She told me she was not an Arab ('Allah be praised!') and not a Moor, either, but a Koulougli—that is, the child of a Moorish woman by a Turkish father.

"One girl's face and manner impressed me greatly. She was not beautiful, hardly pretty, but she had a singularly winsome face, with large, fine gazelle-like eyes. She was a European, a Spaniard from one of the Baleric Isles. Strangely, she was very fair, with blonde hair full of a dusky gold sheen. She had been taken to Oran, at the extreme western end of Algeria, by a Spanish naval officer, and there in a few weeks been deserted. For some months she was a derelict in that old Hispano-Mauresque town. After her child was born she had gone inland, to hill-set Tlemcen, the old Moorish city that stands within sight of the frontier of Morocco. There a rich Moor had taken her to his harem. On his death, a few months later, she had been purchased by a Jew from Algiers, and straightway sold to a young Turk at Bona. The Turk, when tired of her, disposed of his property to an Arab Sheik, who had grown tired of her in turn and placed her in the street cage, an article for sale. For some minutes I stood talking to the poor, imprisoned creature, when a passing guard took notice of the incident and whispered to me in French to move away at once and return to the foreign quarter. He had passed on before I could see his face. The next moment I descried the evil countenance of a Jewish-looking Moor, behind the cage of the Oran woman. He was her owner, and had been listening to our conversation. When he discovered that he had not a purchaser to deal with he came forward brusquely.

"Do you want her or not?" he demanded, sneeringly, in guttural Algerian French. 'No?' Then be off with you, infidel dog, and by the way you came if you value your skin!"

Fly Casting.

In your angling notes, says a writer in the London Standard, you mention the capture of a swallow by a salmon fisher in the Esk, the bird being hooked foul, and remark that, though the story is true, the incredulous will find some difficulty in swallowing it. The following story is true, and still more remarkable. I was fishing on the Wily, on the Boyton Manor water, in Wiltshire, some years ago. In casting across I got "bung up" on a tree on the further bank, and in trying to disengage my line broke off the greater part of the cast and fly, which were left in a tangled condition, quite visible on the tree. While considering how to recover it, I noticed a swallow hovering close by in a curious way, and then saw that it has taken the fly, a quill gnat, and, after a few struggles, hung there suspended with beak open. I was not wading, and could not get over the river without going a long way round, so there I had to leave the poor bird.

But I was destined to have other experiences that afternoon. The swallows were flying in great numbers near the surface of the water, and in casting, as my line was at its full extent behind me, it hooked a swallow foul, and I found the last foot or two of the cast wrapped round and round its body. A few minutes later, just as I was casting forward, I felt a violent check, heard a snap, and found I had hooked another swallow some feet above the ground, and this time the shock had broken my top. I disengaged the bird, put on a spare top and fished on with some trepidation. But though the swallows were still numerous, the experience was not repeated. Of other queer catches I may mention that I have several times hooked bats foul when fishing late in the evening on the same stream, and very nasty customers they were to disentangle. I have also struck them with my rod when casting forward.

I will end with one more chapter. This time it was on the Gloucestershire Coln, at Fairford, some five years ago. I saw a water vole, swimming across and cast idly over him, when to my astonishment and consternation he dived, and my fly caught in his hind leg as he did so. He gave me a lot of sport—it was like playing a pound trout—and the fun was not all over when I got him to land, for before I could use the landing net he set off across the country, and had taken my line through two hedges before I could check him. On this occasion I had a friend with me who saw the whole thing. The other instances you must take my word for. They are absolutely true in every particular, and I have often meant to send them to the press, but never have done so until your remark to-day suggested it.

Embarrassment.

The ancient Egyptian custom of writing upon stone was the occasion of embarrassment, now and then.

For instance, it is said that a certain Pharaoh, whose name is withheld, was much disturbed once upon a time to see a man approaching with a bowlder in his hand.

"Who is he?" asked the King, in great anxiety.

"He is an assassin, who intends throwing yonder rock at your Majesty," answered a slave, affably.

"I thought possibly he was an autograph fiend!" exclaimed the Pharaoh, vastly relieved.

SITUATION BRIGHTER.

With the cessation of rains on Saturday the 11th inst., and continuous dry weather since, the drooping spirits of the Northwestern husbandman have revived. Saturday last saw practically the entire crop cut and shocked, but at that date, a week after the rain, the grain was still too moist to permit of stacking. The bundles showed a dry exterior, but upon examination it was seen the interior was still damp, if not actually wet. Monday of this week stacking operations were generally commenced, and have been progressing ever since, so that at the present writing fully four-fifths of the stacking is completed. The threshing machine has not been idle either, and what with that already threshed, and that in stack, the prospects for saving the crops entire are very good, and a few days more of this favorable weather will suffice. This is probably the hottest harvest on record in this section, it being several weeks earlier than usual, and coming off just when the weather man is trying to break all previous records for protracted heat. So far as Red Lake county is concerned, we have a good crop, a good yield per acre and an unusually fine grade. Our first crop failure has yet to come, and since we have safely passed the flood year of 1899 and the drouth year of 1900, we may well be counted as invincible.

Threshing operators report the yield in the Terrebonne district as averaging from twenty to twenty-two bushels to the acre, and there is reason to believe that other sections of the county will do as well.

SCIENTIFIC FARMING.

What can be done on worn out land or poor soil is illustrated by the following example:

Threshing has just been completed on the farm of Superintendent O.C. Greggs, or Lynd, Lyon County, Minn., and shows an average of 30 bushels per acre, actual weight. This wheat was grown on a field on the edge of the Coteau hills, naturally poor soil and, under ordinary methods of tillage, would have given not over 8 bushels this year. During the past few years the field has been handled according to the improved method of cultivation, which is now being carried on on the whole Coteau farm. The land is first seeded to clover and, in case of very poor land, the clover is cut and allowed to rot on the ground; manure is spread over the top of the ground during the winter and spring; during the winter sheep are fed oat hay and corn on the land and the roughage allowed to remain on the sod to act as a mulch, and finally to be plowed under and become what is known as humus. This humus takes up the water as it comes from above and holds it the same as a sponge, only letting it go when it is needed by the crops, which at the same time find much fertility in the land, stored there by the clover and manure.

A true measure of man is not the street, or the amen corner of the church, nor the forum or lodge room, but at his own fireside. There he lays aside his mask and you can learn if he is an imp or an angel, king or cur, hero of humbug. I care not what the world says of him, whether it crowns him with a jewel or pelts him with stale eggs. I care never a copper what his reputation may be. If his children dread his come coming and his wife swallows her heart every time she asks him for anything, he is a fraud of the first water, even though he prays till he is black in the face and howls hallelujah until he shakes the hills, says one of onr exchanges.

FACTS AND FANCIES.

The dates for the Norman county Fair to be held at Ada have been fixed as the 25th, 26th and 27th of September.

September 27th, 28th and 29th are the dates decided on for holding the ninth annual meeting of the Thirteen Towns Fair Association.

Senator Depew says that New York will soon be London's rival as the world's centre of finance, and that already European countries make no move without considering this country.

A Beltrami county boy, Leslie McNair, son of Jas. McNair, who won the alternateship in the competative examination for the vacancy for Minnesota at the U. S. military academy at West Point, has been admitted to the academy.

A Pembina (N. D.) county man, whose crop is very light, was asked if it had been struck by hail. "No," he replied, "there wasn't a hail stone in that storm bigger than your fist and you couldn't hit that crop with nothing smaller than a wagon wheel."

Beltrami county will have an exhibit at the State fair this year, the expenses to be borne by Messrs. Crowell & Crocker, realestate men. The Shevlin Advocate does not think another county in the state can display a better line of farm produce.

Rev. B. B. Haugen, the Prohibition candidate for governor, will open his campaign about September 1. The party is planning an unusually aggressive campaign this year, and Mr. Haugen will be heard of in all sections of the state before the polls close in November.

At Blue Earth City a fellow is said to have given away the entire secret work of the Modern Woodmen. He say he got it from a book which he got from a preacner who got it down east somewhere. Probably the heavens would not fall if all the secret work of all the orders were given away, but a man is in pretty small business who seeks to expose it.

Lumber firms in the northern part of Minnesota are receiving notices from the commission to see that fishways are provided in their mill dams. Fifteen days is given by the notices in which to comply with the rule, and those who neglect it have been warned that the commission has authority to dynamite any dam found unprovded with ways, when notice has been given.

The people of Bemidji are wrought up to fever heat over the proposition of the new Minnesota & Northern line which wil exteid the Brainerd & Northern into the Red Lake district, to build along the lake front. They fear that it will ruin their summer resort business. A right-of-way man is there trying to get consent to such a move, and the Bemidji Pioneer is sounding its "Bugle of wrath."

Mayor H. H. Aaker, of Moorhead, left last Wednesday evening for Minneapolis upon a matrimonial mission. On Sept. 5, next, Miss Annette Peterson, of Minneapolis, will bestow her hand in marriage upon Moorhead's mayor, who will return immediately after and assume his duties as principal of Concordia college. Miss Peterson has for some time been engaged as teacher of vocal music at Concordia college.

Professor E. F. Ladd, of the agricultural college, has published a long article on the results of his experiment with sugar beets. For a number of years the government experiment station of North Dakota has been investigating the matter, and the article is especially apropos, as there is a plan on foot to erect a big factory at Oakes. Professor Ladd claims that Oakes is the center of a large territory that possesses the ideal conditions for sngar beet raising.

Says the Crookston Tribune: W. A. McIntyre, a graduate of the State University, who has been in the Red River Valley for some time seeking a location for the practice of law, has decided to enter the lists at Red Lake Falls. Mr. McIntyre is a very bright and capable young man and Red Lake Falls is to be congratulated on securing so valuable an addition to her legal profession.

A party of 40 men in the employ of the United States government occupied a coach on the Northern Pacific west bound train the other day. The men are mechanics of all kinds and are bound for China. They are from Washington D. C. Cooks, blacksmiths, harness makers and many other branches were represented. The men will, it is stated, receive 75 cents a day and expenses from the time they enter the employ of the government. They will not have to do any fighting.

The Duluth Herald tells the following hard luck story which comes from a man in Patterson, N. J., suing for a divorce. He thought he had won a home when he married a widow with a boarding house. Now he says she discharged the negro servant and he took his place. He had to arise at 4 and build fires for the regular boarders and then do the heavy work and clean up the kitchen. He always ate alone and at the second table. As the man who had his toe bitten while in bathing remarked: "I don't believe that lobster has a very soft snap."

D. B. Tousley retutned Saturday from Asheville, North Carolina, where he had gone a month ago to accept a position as filer in a saw mill. The heat so affected the saws as to make it necessary to use gloves to handle them. Then he decided to return to Red Lake Falls. At the depot a stranger asked him to change twenty dollars in coin for paper money, so he could mail it. Mr. Tousley assented, but found his coin $1 shy. The stranger handed him back a stamped envelope, supposed to contain the paper money, while he went back in the car to get the other dollar "from my sister." The envelope contained a piece of tissue paper.

POWERS IS GUILTY

SUCH IS THE UNANIMOUS VERDICT OF THE JURY.

Life Imprisonment Is the Punishment Fixed by the Jury That Has Been Trying Ex-Secretary of State Caleb Powers on the Charge of Being an Accessory Before the Fact to the Murder of William Goebel—Move Will Be Made for a New Trial, Failing in That an Appeal Will Be Taken.

Georgetown, Ky., Aug. 21.—"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty, and fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for the rest of his natural life."

This was the wording of the verdict in the case of ex-Secretary of State Caleb Powers, charged with being an accessory before the fact to the murder of William Goebel. The jury retired at 1:32, and returned its verdict at 2:25, having been out only fifty-three minutes. Juror Craig stated afterward that the verdict could have been returned even sooner, but considerable time was taken up in reading the instructions. The vote in favor of a life sentence was unanimous. When the jury retired the belief was general that the jury would fail to agree, and in this opinion the defendant himself was firmly convinced. When the verdict of guilty was returned Powers, for the first time during the weary six weeks of the trial betrayed his feelings. Under all of the trying incidents of the trial he had maintained a changeless expression, the same whether things were going favorable or against him.

Poweres Is Staggered.

The verdict of guilty, however, apparently staggered him. He was sitting near the door of the jury room, and when the jurors knocked on the door, summoning the sheriff, his face took on an anxious look that was noticeable, but did not seem to be particularly apprehensive. When the twelve men filed into the room and took their seats as Clerk Pena called the roll of jurors, the prisoner did not appear to be more excited than the vast throng of spectators who craned their necks to catch the first intimation of the verdict.

"Have you made a verdict, gentlemen?" inquired the court.

"We have," the jurors assented, and at the same time Mr. Stone, the foreman, passed the verdict up to the clerk, who read it aloud. Powers, always pale, grew ghastly so as the verdict was read, and his face betokened great mental anguish. This was only for a few seconds, however, and then, somewhat regaining his composure, he turned to the Misses Dangerfield, who had been in conversation with him, and said: "I was not expecting it; the verdict was unjust."

There was no sort of demonstration following the verdict, and the vast crowd filed out of the court house almost in silence. Powers remained in the court room for some time after the verdict was rendered in conversation with his attorneys, who will at once move for a new trial, and failing in that, will make an appeal.

WORK OF A FIEND.

Young Lady Beaten to Death With a Hammer.

New York, Aug. 21. — Catherine Scharf, aged twenty-two, was beaten to death with a hammer in her rooms some time between 7 p. m. and midnight Saturday, the body not being found until early yesterday morning. Her brother made the discovery when he came home after midnight. The woman's body lay in a pool of blood, face downward. Near by on the floor was a bloody hammer and the rooms had been ransacked of everything of value. It is the opinion of the police that a thief entered the house and was surprised in his work by the girl and that he killed her to prevent identification.

The train was checked just in time to prevent going into the river.

SMOKING CONTESTS.

FOOLISH MEN WHO MADE CHIMNEYS OF THEMSELVES.

A Modest Old Builder Won Easily—A Match With Seventeen Entries—"A Little Fire at One End and a Little Fool at the Other."

Smoking is the temperate as well as the contemplative man's recreation and great smokers are loath to exhibit their tobacco-consuming abilities by engaging in smoking contests. Still, however, there have been some curious tobacco-burning races, says the St. James Gazette. In 1723 there was a great smoking contest in Oxford, England, a scaffold being erected in front of an inn for the accommodation of the competitors. The conditions were that anyone, man or woman, who could smoke three ounces of tobacco first, without drinking or leaving the stage, should have a prize of twelve shillings.

"Many tried," said Hearne, "and 'twas thought that a journeyman tailor of St. Peters in the east would have been the victor, he smoking faster than and being many pipes before the rest, but at last he was so sick 'twas thought he would have died and an old man that had been a builder and smoking gently came off the conqueror, smoking the three ounces quite out, and he told me that after that he smoked three or four pipes the same evening."

About forty years ago a gentleman agreed to smoke a pound weight of strong cigars in twelve hours. The 100 cigars making up the pound were all to be smoked down to one-inch butts. The match was decided on a Thames steamer plying between London and Chelsea, and by taking up his position well forward the smoker had the full benefit of the wind. The contest began at 10 a. m., and in the first hour the smoker consumed sixteen cigars. After nine hours' smoking eighty-six had been disposed of, and with three hours to go and only fourteen to smoke, the backer of time gave in. The winner declared that he felt no discomfort during the contest and finished off the 100 cigars that evening. More recently a solid silver cigar case and 200 cigars were offered to the smoker who consumed most cigars in two hours. Food, drink and medicine were forbidden. There were seventeen entries. After the first hour the competitors retired. The winner, who smoked without pause from start to finish, reduced ten large cigars to ashes in the two hours, while his nearest competitors only finished seven. The people of Lille are inveterate smokers, and to decide the championship of the town a smoking contest was held. Each competitor was provided with a pipe, fifty grammes (about an ounce and three quarters) of tobacco and a pot of beer. The one who smoked the tobacco first was to be the winner. At the signal the air was filled with clouds of smoke. In thirteen minutes a workingman 45 years of age had reduced his weed to ashes, while seven minutes later the second man finished his little smoker. After such herculean smoking matches it is scarcely necessary to mention the American contest; in which the winner smoked 100 cigarettes in six hours and thirty-five minutes.

Has Ticked Five Centuries.

Rouen, one of the principal cities of France, and the greatest seat of its cotton manufacture, possesses the oldest public clock in the world. The great Rouen clock has held its place in that city for 510 years and is the pride of its citizens. Placed in 1389, it has been running without interruption from that day to this, requiring nothing except cleaning and a few trifling repairs of its accessory parts. The great clock had so accustomed the citizens to look upon its exactitude as a matter of course that when, in 1572, the breaking of a wire prevented its sounding 5 o'clock one morning the population was in a state of consternation.

The magistrates summoned the custodian—Guillaume Petit—and remonstrated gravely with him. Until 1712 the great clock had no pendulum. For 323 years it had no other regulator than a "foliot," an apparatus unknown to the majority of modern clockmakers. The pendulum in clockwork was introduced in 1659, but so well satisfied were the people of Rouen with the time-keeping qualities of their famous old clock that fifty-three years were allowed to pass before a pendulum was substituted for the "foliot." Equipped with this new apparatus it has continued to this day to strike the hours and chime the quarters.

A Popular Rose.

A florist gives the information that George Bancroft, America's greatest historian, was the first producer of the American Beauty Rose. "There is quite a story behind the way in which that flower sprang into popularity," he said, the other day. "George Bancroft, in addition to his historical studies, was considerable of a naturalist, and was particularly interested in flowers. Roses were his hobby and he raised a great many of them—not in a haphazard way, but with a scientific insight into their possibilities and a constant view to their improvement.

"When he succeeded in producing the American Beauty it became known to quite a wide circle that he had hit upon a very beautiful flower, and one night the plant was stolen, by whom it was never learned. The flower was taken to France, where it soon achieved a wide popularity, under the name of the American Beauty. Its claims were no less readily recognized in this country and it now occupies a front rank among roses. By all rights, however, it should be known as the Bancroft, rather than as the American Beauty, which latter was the name given to it by those who stole the rose."

Didn't Like the Ending

"Eh, Philbrick, [illegible] heard from your wife?"

"Yes."

"Well, what are [illegible] so [illegible] about? Is she coming home?"

"No. It's the way she ends her letter. Listen: 'From your loving wife, dear, and, don't forget to wash the dog.'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"You are the first man that has ever succeeded in getting a house moved down that fashionable and exclusive street. How did you manage it?"

"Well, I had a pull."

CIRCUS ELEPHANTS

THEY ARE CAREFULLY WATCHED ALL NIGHT.

The Show Beast Must Always Be Scolded and Talked To or He Will Get Into Mischief—The Boss of All the Beasts.

The elephant men have to mind their charges every hour of the day and night. The "bull," to use circus slang, sleeps only about two hours, and often does that on his feet. One fool African elephant—they can't be taught to do anything, and the commonest saying about a show is that they are not worth the hay they eat—has been known to go three weeks without lying down at all. The elephant is always fidgeting about, always swaying that ridiculous bulk of his, which seems to be clad in his big brother's cast-off breeches, always stirring up strife, and always picking at something with his trunk. He might loosen his stake and run wild. He must have something to occupy his mind, and so bales of hay are always at hand to be doled out to him. He must be always scolded and talked to and told to keep out of that, or get back there, or come out where he can be seen. When he isn't being talked to, he is being rapped on the nose with a "bull hook." An elephant has a hide about an inch thick, a temper that is as uncertain as the toss of a coin, the cruelty of an Apache, and the destructiveness of a tornado. Some wise and kind-hearted men in New York who couldn't bear to see a poor dumb brute suffer, decreed that the "bull-hook" must not be used. They didn't have to be with the elephants all the time. The men who did, either hid the hook part in their hands while the agents of the S. P. C. A. were around, or displayed broomsticks that would bring an elephant to time about as soon as a feather duster would stop a cyclone. The bull hook is shaped like a boot hook. It has a straight point. This is to jab in where the skin is tenderest, near the root of the tail. It is a sight well worth seeing to witness Patsy Forepaugh (his name is Mears, but he was with Addie Forepaugh so long that people hardly know what his right name is) get the elephants to bunt the wagons up from the basement of the Madison Square Garden. He is the boss of all the herd, a short, stocky little man with a quick eye—he needs it in his business—and something about his looks which says that if you want to get into a fight with him you had better make arrangements to spend about six weeks in the hospital. The workmen get the wagon slewed around, so that it will go up the inclined plane. Then they scatter like trash before a broom. Here comes Patsy walking along with two elephants, their attitude seeming to say: "We don't want to," while Patsy seems to say: "This one right here. All together now." They make curious noises. They sometimes whine so that you can locate the very spot it comes from, and other times not so unlike the last pedal key of a church organ. Oftenest it is like an amateur trying to blow a cornet for the first time. They shuffle up to a wagon, put their foreheads against it, and up it goes. Patsy trots behind them, making vicious downward jabs with his hook, while he shouts: "Hooyah! Hooyah!" They scull their way along the inclined plane and toddle down again for more. Once I saw a wagon half way up come rolling down while the elephants turned tail and ran trumpeting with terror. A lion inside, angry at having his sleep broken, roared. That was all Romey and John wanted to hear. They fled, Patsy after them with his hook, and though they snuffed and breathed hard, they had to come and push that wagon up. Perhaps they will treasure that up and some day—well, some day they are sure to get him.—Ainslee's Magazine.

Rent in Opie Read's Rented Suit.

Opie Read hates to wear a dress suit, says the Chicago Journal.

Recently he was invited to appear before a large and fashionable audience, and, much against his wishes, he was prevailed upon to borrow for the occasion a dress suit.

The author told him stories to the assembly, and much laughter and applause greeted his recital. As he turned to leave the stage the laughter and applause broke forth with redoubled emphasis. The author stepped forth from the wings and bowed low in recognition of the flattering greeting, then left the stage again. The laughter grew louder. Mr. Reid re[illegible] ledgement and again sought the wings.

[illegible] continuing, Mr. Read was about to make another sally, when a friend behind the footlights grabbed him.

"They're not laughing at your stories, Opie," whispered the friend. "They are laughing at a big rip in the back of your coat. Upon your first appearance you burst it from top to bottom."

Mr. Read subsided without a word.

How She Tried to Do It.

The infant child of the eminent author was raising Cain and most every one else who has been buried since the days of the fall, says Harper's Bazar. He was bawling at the top of his voice, and it towered above even the skyscrapers of Lower Broadway. And in the meantime the eminent author was trying to extract from his inner consciousness a quiet, peaceful, idyllic description of a medieval love scene. Presently he began to notice the wild cries that were breaking in on his concentration, and when they passed beyond his endurance he finally rose and stalked majestically from the study to confer with the wife of his bosom.

"What in creation is Willie howling about? By my halidom one would think he was possessed of a demon. Dost thou not perceive that he disturbs me? What ails him?"

"Well," said the patient wife, with a half sob, "I am sure I don't know what to do with him."

"But why is he crying?"

"Simply because I made him stop making a noise for fear he would disturb you at your work."

De Jones—I hear your firm discharged you.

Smythe—Yes; but I wouldn't mind that so much if they hadn't added insult to injury.

De Jones—How so?

Smythe—They advertised for a boy to fill my place.—Chicago News.

Enterprise.

"Next month," wrote the editor of one of the most progressive of the many magazines having each the greatest number of intelligent readers in his prospectus, "we shall begin the publication of a series of 1,000—count them—1,000 articles on the Second Epistle of St. Peter, by the Colonel of the Seventy-ninth Regiment of Oklahoma Volunteers!"

Then he remarked to his entourage that he guessed certain rival publications would not wish they had never been born, so hot was the pace become.—Detroit Journal.

Expensive.

"How much," inquired the stranger in the Board of Trade gallery, "does it cost to belong to this institution?"

It costs all the way from $1,000 to $1,500 a seat," was the reply.

The stranger marveled at the immensity of the sum.

"Why, you can get a good seat at a champion prize fight for less than that," he said—Chicago Tribune.

In After Years.

"Why, what's the matter, Nellie?" asked her maiden aunt.

"Oh, auntie," replied the bride of a month. "It's too provoking for anything. Tom treats me just as if I were a child."

"Well, don't mind a little thing like that, my dear," said the old lady; "when you get to be my age you will remember it with pleasure."—New York World.

Deceased was for many years an engineer of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and established many colonies in the West and Southwest. He leaves a wife and three children.

Miss Estelle Reel, general superintendent of the Indian schools, is making preparations to visit the Northwest. A waterspout, which increased in size during the fifteen minutes it was in view on Lake St. Clair, from a mere thread until it looked to be 150 feet in diameter, frightened the residents of the St. Clair flats, Michigan, but did no damage.

Eleven persons were instantly killed and several others seriously injured in a grade-crossing accident three miles east of Slatington, Pa., by a passenger train on the Lehigh & New England railway crashing into an omnibus containing twenty-five persons. All the dead and injured were in the omnibus, and but three escaped.

From Other Shores.

The khedive of Egypt, accompanied by a considerable suite, is enjoying his stay on the northern shore of the Lake of Geneva.

Lorenz Schweitz of Breslau has just been appointed to the post of public executioner for Prussia. He is a retired business man and well to do.

Latest reports of the coal experts from the United States, now in Mexico, show an increase last month of nearly 40 per cent over the same period of last year, this increase being divided between shipments to Mexico and Canada.

Enormous posters announcedthe coming of America's famous bandmaster, John Philip Sousa, to Munich. With his band of sixty-five musicians he did not disappoint the public, who listened with great delight to his characteristic music.

Whatever may be the reason, there is no doubt of the fact that the Geneva hotels are doing a very poor business compared to former years. By some, this state of affairs is accounted for by the resentment of the British against the virulent attacks made upon them by the Swiss since the beginning of the Boer war.

Princess Elizabeth of Bavaria, who is to marry, in October, Prince Albert, heir persumptive to the throne of the Belgians, is already very popular in Brussels, where thousands of her photographs, imported from Munich, are being sold.

The age reached by city trees is by no means an immaterial question. Prof. Mangin, in a lecture recently delivered at the Sorbonne, Paris, pointed out that there were 90,000 trees in the city of Paris, not counting those in the parks, cemeteries and school yards. Each tree cost from 150 to 175 francs, $30 to $35. This makes a capital of about 15,000,000,000 francs, or some $2,895,000. It will be seen that a tree's age has not merely a scientific interest, but that it is of the utmost economical importance. Among the Paris trees there are 25,287 planes, 17,135 chestnuts, 15,596 elms, 9,796 alders, 6,050 maples, 5,125 planemaples, 4,027 locust trees, or false acacias, 22 linden trees and 1,034 paulownias. Generally speaking, the mortality of the trees in the center of the city is almost double that of the trees in the outskirts.

CARE OF THE TEETH

MOST PEOPLE PAY TOO LITTLE ATTENTION TO THEM.

The Most Common Causse of Bad Teeth—Acid Injures Teeth More Than Sweets—The Most Important Rule to Follow to Preserve Them.

It is curious what little attention people pay to their teeth. If anyone's boots begin to wear out he has them repaired at once, and when a button gets loose he has it sewn on, but unless a bad toothache drives him to the dentist he will let every tooth in his mouth wear down to a stump without giving it a thought.

Of course the result in most cases is bad dyspepsia, besides an exceedingly ugly disfigurement of the mouth.

Yet nothing is easier for people of ordinary good health than to keep sound teeth in their heads until they have reached a good old age. But to do this they should begin to take care of them when comparatively young.

One of the commonest causes of bad teeth is taking food too hot. When you drink a cup of very hot tea the enamel covering of the teeth expands, and afterward, when you breathe the cold air, it contracts. This alternate swelling and shrinking makes the enamel fall to pieces, and once the hard covering goes the spongy inner substance crumbles away in no time.

To prove how destructive hot food is, says the Philadelphia Inquirer, a dentist recently performed an instructive experiment. He got a glass of hot and a glass of cold water, and placed a perfectly sound tooth first in one, then in the other, and so on, backward and forward, several hundred times with the curious result that the enamel was completely worn off.

Every one knows the injurious effects of acid on the teeth. Yet many foolish girls drink vinegar to make their faces pale, and, as they think, interesting. Of course the teeth pay the penalty. A young girl who consulted me lately had lost almost every tooth in her head from sucking lemons, and some of my most profitable patients are people given to eating pickles. It is not necessary altogether to avoid acids, but a little jar of bicarbonate of soda should be kept on every one's washstand and the teeth should be rinsed in water in which some of it has been dissolved. This, by the way, is a never-failing cure for that kind of toothache that attacks the whole jaw at once.

Some people say that sweets are bad for the teeth. I am not quite sure of that. West Indians, who actually live on sugar during the harvesting of the cane, have ivories like snow and without a flaw. But when one's teeth have begun to decay the sugar lodges in the crevices and a little microbe, who makes his home in the mouth, converts it into acid. This acid, of course, attacks the phosphate of lime which composes the dentine, and then, certainly, sugar is bad.

But cracking nuts with the teeth is destructive. If you crack nuts you are sure also to crack the enamel. Therefore, don't crack nuts. Put them on the ground and stamp on them.

Tooth powders and tooth washes are answerable for many a toothache and decayed tooth. The powders usually sold are gritty; pastes contain injurious chemicals, and though both help to clean the teeth they inevitably wear away the enamel. Most of the washes, such as tincture of myrrh, keep the gums more or less inflamed and finally loosen the teeth. Hard tooth brushes ruin the gums.

The best way to clean your teeth is to wipe them with a bit of a sponge attached to a handle, using tepid water containing a trace of some mild antiseptic. If you use a brush rub it up and down, not from side to side.

Smoking tobacco cannot fail to color the teeth yellow, and probably it weakens the gums and brings on decay. Still, you can scarcely be expected to do without your smoke for the sake of a few teeth.

But whatever precautions you take one or two of your teeth will probably begin to go. The moment this happens visit a dentist and have the cavity filled. This is really the most important rule with regard to the teeth. And you will save money by the operation, for it is cheaper to have a tooth filled today than replaced twelve months hence.

The Czar's Physician.

A health magazine, Omega, says: The present Emperor of Russia, instead of being an invalid just ready to die, is a man of good health and great ability to work, and he is also a hygienist to a far greater extent than is generally believed, and his physician is also a hygienist in so far as cleanliness and fresh air are concerned. He is thus spoken of in relation to the late Emperor:

"Fresh air was the creed emblazoned on his banner of hygiene, and fresh air he would have at any cost. No practitioner had more stoutly demanded the assistance of this valuable aid to nature's recuperation and his insistence doubtless occasioned much heart burning among his patients, who, like many others in our country, have a great fear of fresh air for the sick room. Zaccharin entertained no such qualms, and with brusque petulancy insisted on having doors and windows opened. When he visited the dying Czar he found him surrounded by the Czarina and other members of the family, and on entering the sick-room, ignoring the presence of the exalted individuals, he loudly demanded air, remarking at the same time, in tones of deep reproach: 'What an atmosphere! It is disease-breeding. And in this air you allow Russia's little father to die!' And then, without more ado, he roughly tore down the curtains and threw open the windows."

Silk Spun by Shellfish.

A shellfish, known as the pinna, in the Mediterranean, has the curious power of spinning a viscid silk, which is made in Italy into a regular fabric. The silk is spun by the shellfish, in the first place, for the purpose of attaching itself to the rocks. It is able to guide the delicate filaments to the proper place and then glue them fast, and if they are cut away it can reproduce them. The material when washed in soap and water, dried and straightened, one pound of the coarse filament yielding three ounces of the fine thread, which, when spun, is of a lovely burnished golden-brown color

Chinese are dangerous onemies, for they are troacherous. That's why the Counterfeits of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve are dangerous. They look like DeWitt's, but instead of the all-healing witch hazel they all contain ingredients liable to irritate the skin and cause blood poisoning. For piles, injures and skin deseases use the original and genuine DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. W. A. Schreiter.

Octave Beauchaime started his threshing rig yesterday. He reports grain turning out well and of first quality.

Logs began to run by here this week, and it is to be hoped they will keep on coming. Especially the saw mill hands are anxious about them.

Rain in this vicinity delayed farmars considerably, this week, many having been compelled to open their shocks to permit of them drying. Some were surprised to find sprouted wheat, but such is the case.

Your correspondent notices that several farmers hereabouts have commenced stacking their wheat. I think it wise on their part to do so because in the first place the grain is safe, providing the stack is well made, and secondly, the grain acquires a better color and grade.

The wolf in the fable put on sheep's clothing because if he trevels in his own reputation he couldn't accomplish his purpose. Counterfeiters of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve couldn't sell their worthless salves on their merits, so they put them in boxes and wrappers like DeWitt's. Look out for them. Take only DeWitt's Witch Hazel Selve. It cures piles and all skin dieeases. W. A. Schreiter.

Several wheat stacks are to be seen now. The farmers say they will stack their wheat and get it all No. 1 hard.

A good sized barn belonging to Ole W. Opperud was recently destroyed by fire. It is said that it was struck by lightning and is well insured.

Ole Gerswold, of Black River, was here Friday and Saturday and had his grain harvested on the Gutormson farm, Mr. Brannum, of St. Hilaire, was cutting for him.

The reports of damage by hail in River Falls are without foundation in fact. We have yet to hear of a single case of hail in the township, although much damage was done by the rain to the hay. The Beltrami hay cutting Co. is said to have lost 75 tons.

Fables of the Rail--9.

An industrious organ grinder was busily engaged in grinding out coon songs one day when a citizen engaged him in conversation. Said he: "Why do you not soak the organ employ your great talents in working on the street for the municipality instead of annoying the populace with the hideous noises that emanate from yonder box?" But the organ grinder smiled craftily and said: "Some time you will understand that the streets are not paved with gold and that an organ in the hand is worth two in the pawn shop. Besides it is not fair to take the money of the people and by minding my own business I am in a fair way to be able to take my family to Europe soon and visit the scenes of my childhood.

TAX CASES.

Judge Watts, of the District Court, Holds That Taxes Delinquent Prior to 1888 Are NotCollectable.

At the Forfeited Tax sale at Crookston in May, many taxpayers put in an answer alleging irregularities in the procedure and also that the taxes prior to the year 1888 were outlawed by statutory limitation, and absolutely noncollectable. Judge Watts on Saturday made a ruling, admitting the last claim, and thus freeing the property owners from the necessity of paying the taxes for years prior to 1888. The other claims will be ignored, however, and the lands put up again for sale, in the near future, on account of the taxes accruing since 1888. Those interested are confident that the forfeited tax law is in itself invalid, and further that the tax proceedings were in several instances irregular, and if any outside purchasers intervene the matter will be at once brought into the courts. M. O. Sortedahl, Chas. N. Bourdon, Ernest Buse and Chas. E. Boughton drove to Crookston Saturday, being interested in the matter. Mr. Sortedahl's interest comes in as purchaser of the Langevin estate. B. Sampson, of Crookston, and others, are heavily benefited by the ruling of Judge Watts.

Would Revolutionize Wheat Raising.

Minneapolis millers and grain men will be shown an example of Egyptian wheat, a new production which is demanding attention from farmers in different parts of the state, and which may in time completely revolutionize wheat raising here as well as in adjoining states.

H. C. Olson, one of the most prosperous agriculturists in Norman county, Minnesota, is a firm believer that this wheat has properties that will win for itself a front rank in grain products.

Mr. Olson distributed samples of this wheat to Minneapolis grain men last week. In an interview he said:

"I obtained some of this wheat from friends of mine who live in the Black Hills. I had frequently heard of this remarkable wheat and was very anxious to try some of it myself.

"I only secured eight quarts and sowed it upon a quarter of an acre. It ripened several days in advance of the other wheat I had sown.

"Though I have not had a chance to test its milling properties, I am confident that it will eclipse anything of its kind.

"The head of the wheat is not round like the ordinary wheat, but flat in form, branching out from the sides. This gives it an odd appearance.

"It is a bearded variety and seems to be a hard wheat. The head is very full you will notice, and the kernels are of good size.

"My friends in the Black Hills have tried it two seasons, and declare that next year they will sow no other, being satisfied that Egyptian wheat is the proper wheat to cultivate."

Mr. Olson says that as far as he knows very little of this wheat has been grown in Minnesota. But now he has tried it for himself, and when he tests its milling properties he will know whether or not this is the proper article for him to sow next year.

Noble-Van Camp.

St Thomas Times: A very pretty home wedding occurred Thursday, August 23rd, at half past two in the afternoon, at the residence of Orberlin Van Camp, three miles north of this city, when Rev. J. H. Dewart, pastor of the Methodist church, spoke the words which united for life, Miss Lena Winifred Van Camp and Almon Everett Noble. The ceremony took place in the parlor, which was beautifully decorated with roses, ferns and smilax. The bride and groom unattended, came into the presence of the company to the strains of a wedding march played by Mrs. W. R. Stinson. The bride looked very sweet in a gown of white organdie, carrying a bouquet of bridal roses, the groom being dressed in conventional black.

After the ceremony had been performed and the congratulations of the guests showered upon the happy couple, a very dainty and appetizing wedding luncheon was served from small tables. Many beautiful and valuable gifts from relatives and friends denoted the esteem in which the young people are held.

Both the bride and groom have resided in St. Thomas for years, and have really grown from childhood to man and womanhood in our midst. They are young people of high ideals and correct principles and have hosts of warm friends among the people of this neighborhood. The happy couple left on the evening express for Red Lake Falls, Minn., where the groom has an excellent position with the Robertson Lumber Company, and where they will commence housekeeping. A shower of rice, old shoes and good wishes followed them as the train pulled out of the station.

New Law Firm.

Germo & McIntyre is the title of a new law firm which has decided to locate in Red Lake Falls. They have rented offices over O'Brien Bros.' hardware store, in the Scheldrup block. Both gentlemen graduated from the Minnesota Law School this year. Mr. McIntyre is from Warren, while Mr. Germo hails from Mapleton. The latter gentleman is at present not in the city, having gone back home for his library, and to make final arrangements for his removal here, but will return to-morrow or the day after.

No Organization.

A Crookston paper is authority for the statement that an attempt was made last Friday to organize the retail machine dealers of Red Lake Falls, for the purpose of securing uniformity in prices on goods handled. The report is not founded on fact, as no attempt has been made by the local dealers to form any organization of the kind, so The Gazette is informed by the prominent ones, who know.

A FEW FACTS.

Concerning That Portion of the Red Lake Indian Reservation Lying Within Red Lake, Marshall and Polk Counties.

Under the above heading the Thief River Falls Commercial Club have issued the following statement:

There is room for sixteen hundred settlers on this land—land that cannot be beaten in the Red River Valley.

It contains over 11 townships of richest agricultural land, principally free from brush and ready for the breaking plow.

Whole townships of this choice land have not been touched by the foot of man for years.

It is practically abandoned by the Indians for the big-game country around the lakes.

Twenty Indian families live on this land but a portion of the year.

They live along the river and never go back into the country.

Of 145,000 acres less than five have been broken up and cultivated.

The Red Lake River flows through the center of this piece.

Five steamboats ply the Red Lake river.

It is high land and never floods out.

The Indians do not use it.
They do not want it.
We do.

"The Same Old Thing."

The Select base ball team played the first game, of a series of three, at Crookston yesterday and were defeated by a score of 12 to 13 after they had practically won the game. The score stands as follows:

Selects—	2	3	1	0	1	1	1	3	0	—12
Crookston—	3	4	0	0	2	0	0	0	4	—13

Another game will be played in this city next Tuesday.

ORDER OF THE OWL.

Hon. C. E. Whelan, of Madison, Wis., Has Launched a Juvenile Auxiliary to the M. W. A.

The Patriotic Order of the Owl, a society for boys and young men from 10 to 17 years of age, has been launched by Hon. C. E. Whelan, of Madison, Wis., state lecturer for the Modern Woodmen society. The ritual is now in press. The purpose of the new society is to teach patriotism and fraternity, and prepare the young members for membership in the Modern Woodmen society when they become of age. The ritualistic work of the Owls is said to be very attractive, and the ceremony of initiation is intensley patriotic. The Owls, having dwelt in the forest with the Woodmen for a long time, have formed a coalition with them for mutual benefit. They have been recognized as factors in patriotic and fraternal work by the genius of Woodcraft, and lessons on the value of the society are given. One of the principal officers of the Owls is a Woodman, and he is assisted by two others. Woodmen may become honorary Owls by taking an obligation especially prepared for them, and are not required to take the regular work. Every camp of the Owls will be a feeder for the Modern Woodmen camp in the same city, the Owls, as they come of age, become members of the Woodman Society. It is said the Red Lake Falls Woodmen will organize the Owl auxiliary here.

Will Hold a Fair.

As announced by the Rev. Fr. Ansgar some time ago, St. Mary's congregation will hold a fair this fall for the benefit of the church. It is two years since a fair has been held, and the event will no doubt be a successful one, as the congregation is thoroughly united, and growing stronger. The exact date has not yet been determined but a meeting will shortly be held to perfect arrangements.

A large crew of men has gone to Red Lake to open up a boom of some 9,000,000 feet of logs which has been tied up there for some time. Most of the logs are destined for the East Grand Forks mill.

Democrats in Convention.

The Democratic county convention is being held in Red Lake Falls today. The total number of delegates, according to the call, entitled to seats in the convention, is sixty-one, but a full attendance is not present, owing doubtless to the bad roads, after the severe storm this morning. However, those present make up in enthusiasm for the lack in numbers. The convention was called to order this afternoon at 2 o'clock by W. T. Spillane, chairman of the county central committee.

The names mentioned for county auditor are Adam Zeh, and Julius Raymond, of Red Lake Falls, and E. H. Burkee, of St. Hilaire. For treasurer, Jacob Thill of Wylie; for register of deeds, Edonor Perusse, of Terrebonne; for Supt. of Schools, Frank Jeffers; for Judge of Probate, J. T. Knight, of this city, and S. T. Johnson, of Thief River Falls; for county attorney, F. A. Grady, of this city, and H. W. Lee, of Thief River Falls; surveyor, Day F. Stacy; sheriff, E. H. Draper, of Thief River Falls, and Dan Linnehan, of Red Lake Falls; commissioner for 2nd district, Sam Luxenburger; commissioner for 4th district, Chas. Robeckke.

The convention is proceeding slowly, and no nominations have been made at the hour of going to press, 4 p. m.

Second Crop of Blossoms.

The peculiarities of the present season have produced many strange things in farming and horticulture, and one of the most unusual is reported by Wm. Heidrich, one of the prosperous farmers who resides a couple of miles east of the city. Mr. Heidrich has given considerable attention to the raising of small fruits and his orchard contains a number of apple trees of different varieties. One of these blossomed and bore fruit this summer, proving that the climate of the Red River Valley is favorable to the raising of apples. These are now ripe, and in order not to lose any time, the tree has blossomed again, and presents a beautiful appearance, laden with the pink and white flowers.—Crookston Times.

WAR NOT DECLARED

RUMOR REGARDING RUSSIA, JAPAN AND GERMANY UNFOUNDED.

Statement Made Upon Authority of the Highest Character — Rumor Had Caused Interesting Comment Among Washington Officials—Report Comes From Japanese Sources That the Chinese Had Rallied Their Forces and Were Preparing for an Attack Upon the Allies in Peking.

Washington, Aug. 28. — Russia, Germany and Japan have not declared war upon China either separately or in concert. This statement is made upon the authority of the highest character. What those nations may do within the next forty-eight hours, or within the next fortnight is a question which no one in Washington is prepared to answer. A brief dispatch from Chefu conveying a rumor current there that Russia, Germany and Japan had joined in a declaration of war upon China aroused some interesting comment among Washington officials and among diplomatic representatives of foreign governments resident here. In neither official nor diplomatic circles, however, was the rumor Taken Seriously.

No information of such action has reached either the department of state or the legations of the governments primarily interested. That fact alone is accepted in official circles as a sufficient refutation of the rumor. Late in the day a dispatch was received at the Japanese legation from the foreign office of Japan conveying the latest and most authoritative information of the situation in and around Peking. In a measure the advices were of a disquieting nature, as they indicated that the Chinese had rallied their forces and were preparing for an

in Peking. If it should prove that the allied forces were besieged in Peking it would account for the lack of a dispatch from Gen. Chaffee. As made public by Minister Takahari, the dispatch from the Japanese foreign office at Tokio is as follows:

"An official telegram dated Peking, Aug. 18, was received at Tokio from Gen. Yamaguhi, commander of the Japanese forces, to the following effect: 'The capital is now entirely cleared of the enemy. A cavalry regiment which had been at Wan Shau Shan (where the empress dowager's palace is located) reports that the imperial family, who had left Peking Aug. 14, started, after a short rest at Wan Shau Shan, for the west, and were of Gen. Ma and his troops, consisting of about 500 horsemen and twenty carts. The Japanese forces occupied the treasury department, in which over 2,000,000 taels in silver and a large quantity of rice were found. Another telegraph dispatch, dated Taku, Aug. 23, states that as the Chinese troops and Boxers who had gathered at Nan Yuen were about to attack the forces at Peking, Japanese and Russian cavalry were expected to encounter them on the 20th. The dispatch further states that Chinese infantry, some 9,000 strong, with fifteen guns, are advancing forward from Shan Tung to make a rear attack on the allies.'"

FIGHT FIRE AT COUNCIL CITY.

Blazing Forests in the Nome District Threaten to Destroy the Homes of the Gold Seekers.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 28.—For nearly two weeks the 2,000 residents of Council City, according to Nome advices, have fought a fierce fight against forest fires, which threatened the whole town. On Aug. 10 the terrible forest fires on Solomon river had ceased or had passed further up the river. Twenty-five cabins of the settlement were burned; ten partly so. Charles Blackwood of Cleburne, Tex., was burned to death on Aug. 6 while attempting to set a back fire on the prairie. Three other men were slightly injured.

GOES TO DEATH LIKE A MAN.

Lieut. Cordu, of Transvaal Artillery, Pierced by Bullet Holes.

London, Aug. 28.—A dispatch from Pretoria gives details of the execution of Lieut. Cordua, of the Transvaal artillery, convicted by a court martial of breaking his parole in plotting to abduct Lord Roberts and kill British officers. He walked fearlessly to the garden behind the jail. At his own request he was bound and sat in a chair with folded arms. He told Capt. Blanchard, commanding the firing party, that he was ready, and ten bullets struck him. The body was buried near the spot where the lieutenant fell.

INSECTS ALMOST KILL HIM.

Swarms of Mosquitoes Nearly Bite a Farmer to Death.

Nashville, Ill., Aug. 28. — With his features distorted beyond all human semblance, and his hands and arms swollen and scarred, Andrew Schlake, a farmer living north of this city, was found wandering about in the swamps along the Okaw river. Myriads of mosquitoes hovered over him and covered his face and body. He was taken to his home by friends and it was found that he was suffering from thousands of mosquito bites. Schlake had become lost while hunting and had fought mosquitoes all night. His case is considered serious.

Stabbed in the Heart.

Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 28. — Charles Horner, an inspector on the Norfolk & Western railway, was stabbed in the heart by James Geisler, a farmer, at the station at Valley Crossing, eight miles south of this city last night.

Drowned While Bathing.

Kansas City, Aug. 28. — Matthew Hunter, aged nineteen, and Joseph Marino, aged eighteen, were drowned in Troost park lake last night while boating. They tried to change seats and their boat was capsized.

AWAITING ORDERS

ALLIES ARE REFRAINING FROM AGGRESSIVE ACTION.

They Desire Instructions From Their Governments — Attack on Peking Anticipated and Americans and British Are Moved to Outer City Wall—Boxers Are Advancing From the South—Famine Is Imminent at Tien-tsin—Fate of Forbidden City Will Be Left to Europe.

London, Aug. 28. — The latest news from Peking indicates that the situation there is unchanged. The imperial city is still invested, but has not yet been occupied. The allies, when the last message left, were still refraining from aggressive action, pending instructions from their governments. An attack from 30,000 Boxers was anticipated, and to meet this, the whole American force and the British artillery, according to a dispatch to the Morning Post from Peking, dated Aug. 18, were moved to the outer city wall. The Boxers were reported coming from the south. Gen. Dorward, in his report of the engagement outside Tien-tsin Aug. 19, when the Americans, British and Japanese a large force of Boxers, killing over 300, says in a dispatch, dated Aug. 25: "The lines of communication near Tien-tsin are now free from danger. The enemy had been treating the villagers bad. Several decapitated bodies were found near their camp. The villagers are now flocking toward Tien-tsin at the rate of about a thousand a day. As there is not more than a month's food supply there is a prospect of a famine shortly."

This announcement that a famine is imminent in consequence of a shortage of provisions at Tien-tsin adds to the difficulties of the situation. A Shanghai dispatch states that the

of Emperor Kwang Su by the Japanese was an error. It was a case of mistaken identity. At a conference of ministers and generals held at Taku Friday it was decided, according to the Daily Telegraph, to refer the fate of the forbidden city to Europe. Tien-tsin dispatches to Berlin dated Aug. 23, say: "The Japanese troops are in possession of the wall around the innermost part of the forbidden city, but have not yet made their way to the imperial palace, owing to lack of Government Instructions."

Lieut. Gen. Linevitch, commander of the First Siberian army corps, cabling to St. Petersburg under date of Aug. 26, says: "There are no longer any Boxers in Peking. They were driven out to-day by the French and Russians, whose flags were hoisted over the imperial city. The empress dowager, the emperor, the heir apparent, and the whole court have fled to the province of Shen Si. Li Hung Cheng, according to a Shanghai dispatch, has once more postponed his departure for the north."

SUCH IS SOUTH AFRICA.

You land in South Africa at the foot of a mountain, 3,600 feet high. They call it Table Mountain, and the veil of mist that, excepting on very clear days, overhangs it, South Africans are pleased to term the "Tablecloth." Presenting a front of solid rock, 1,000 feet in height, perpendicular as a wall, and for half a mile on top level, this mountain offers the best natural signboard on earth. Time and again have British firms attempted with fabulous sums to secure it for advertising purposes, but, as yet, there has been no such defacement.

Table Mountain marks the tip end of the Dark Continent. Below it nestles the city of Cape Town, a beautiful bay stretching out in the foreground. On the West the mountain breaks off abruptly, and the railroad skirts about it to the interior. On the east it slopes off into a hilly, picturesque formation known as the "Lion's Back," and then gradually rises into the Drakensburg Mountains. This is the only great mountain range south of the Zambesi, and by noting its location one may understand in a trice just what South Africa is geographically. Steaming along the east coast from Cape Colony northward, you have the Drakenburg in view nearly all the way to Beira, a distance of 2,000 miles. In Cape Colony and Natal the mountains in many places dip the waters' edge, and with a field glass one may see on their crags and peaks smoke curling up from the native villages. In Portuguese territory the mountains recede slightly from the coast, and at Delagoa Bay there is an intervening stretch of lowland twenty miles wide. At Beira this has increased to sixty miles. At the Zambesi the Drakensburg ends.

To get into the interior of South Africa from any of the five east coast landing places—Port Elizabeth, East London, Durban, Delagoa Bay and Beira—one must cross a short extent of low land and then ascend steep mountains. Having arrived there, the traveller is conscious of little or no descent, five sixths of the whole interior being a vast plateau that extends to the Zambesi on the north, the Atlantic ocean on the west, and varies in altitude from 3,000 to 6,000 above the sea.

A fringe of tropical country, where bloom the magnolia and the rose, where flourish the orange, pineapple, lemon, guava, grape, banana, the cotton and the tea plant; a long stretch of mountains running parallel with the Indian Ocean, the highest peaks of which are capped with snow, and in whose valleys wave tracts of wheat and corn; a vast prairies, dotted here and there with patches of scrub woodland, mission stations, and immense farms with millions of sheep and cattle grazing thereon: a few thousand hamlets scattered like oases over a great landscape, made black by the native Africans who live in thatched huts, and wear but a breech clout; a dozen large towns where is heard the clang of the American trolley car and the clatter of the police patrol, and about which men cluster as flies gather to a jar of sweets; the remnants of a once mighty zoological garden, including many leopards, beautiful and lithe, baboons, antelope, jackals and crocodiles, a less number of hippopotami and a few herds of buffalo, elephants and giraffes, some iron ore, some coal, some copper, and a little silver; forty miles of gold and 100 acres of diamonds. That is South Africa.—Ainslie's Magazine.

Meaning of the Word Gun.

"The evolution of the word 'gun' forms an interesting study in 'up-to-date etymology,'" remarked one of a party of newspaper men. "A dozen or so years ago we all understood gun to mean a fowling piece—a shotgun as distinguished from a rifle or a musket. Heavy and light ordnance, in fact all pieces of artillery, without regard to size, were known as cannon. That, of course, was where people made an effort to speak English. Out in the frontier the word gun was applied exclusively to pistols.

"Nowadays the nomenclature has curiously changed. By degrees the good old word gun has become monopolized by the long, slim, murderous machines that constitute our modern artillery. We speak of quick-fire guns, 8-inch 10-inch, 12-inch guns, and the word seems singularly apropos. They are not cannon. 'Cannon' immediately suggests the big, lumbering, black-throated, smooth-bores of the past. The word conjures up all sorts of curious antique pictures—swappers naked to the waist, motionless men holding lighted matches, frigates lashed together and firing into each other's ports, Sepoys bound to the muzzle, neat geometric forts, the charge of the Light Brigade, and lots of other things too humerous to mention."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Pussy Seemed to Be a Hoodoo.

If ever the tug Lorne picks up another derelict, and there happens to be a black cat on the abandoned vessel, the chances are the feline will be allowed to remain, for the cat taken from the wreck of the Jane A. Falkenburg seems to have been a hoodoo of the most pronounced type. Storms followed the tug all the while the cat was on board, and many other things have transpired on the tug that were certainly not to the increased benefit of those on the vessel. That was because of the hoodoo brought from the wrecked barkentine, said some, and when Capt. Locke shipped the feline to her little mistress at San Francisco by the Walla Walla on her last trip down from here it was thought that all the trouble was ended; but no—two of the officers of the tug are now no longer connected with the vessel, and other things happened. The steamer carrying the cat to San Francisco broke down when off the entrance to the Golden Gate, and had to be towed into port. As will be remembered, the cat was taken from the wreck by the Walla Walla when that vessel rescued the shipwrecked men, but jumped into the sea, and swam back to the wreck, and remained on board until the tug found the derelict.—Victoria Times.

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

WOULD BE A STAR

"You are an hour late, Miss Tremaine," said the stage manager, taking out his watch accusingly and giving the offender a look as severe as his speech. "We couldn't properly practice this step with one girl out."

"I was unavoidably detained," stammered the young woman.

"The ever-ready excuse," said the stage manager, growing angry. "Don't waste any more time. Get in your place. Ready!"

"One and two and three and—Miss Tremaine, you're not doing this step right at all. What's the matter with you today. Begin over again. All together now."

The girl who was the object of the manager's ire may have merited some of the reproof, for certainly her thoughts were not upon acquiring the step of the English chappies, whose role the twelve young women in line across the stage were to assume. To and fro, and in intricate figures across the stage, so bare and dreary without scenery, moved the young women, keeping step with the drill master, whose contortions they painfully endeavored to reproduce.

"It's those long skirts," he declared, his keen eye sweeping the line of breathless young women. "I told you yesterday not to wear those skirts. I won't speak about it again."

"I'll have to wear it, sir," said one young women, timidly.

"Why?" asked the angry manager, "haven't I said you shouldn't?"

"But it's all I've got," said the girl, with a suspicion of a sob in her voice.

"Pin it up, then," said the manager. Now, then, try again. Come in from the right. One——"

"That will do. You've got to do better tomorrow."

The young women went back with the chorus sitting on the benches, and the leading lady, who had been going through a kind of dumbbell performance with a prompter at one side, came forward and sang with much fervor and effect to an imaginary audience in the seats that even the musical director cried "Good!" and added his bravos to the rest.

Grace Tremaine slipped unobserved through the side door of the stage and passed out through the boxes into the long aisle. The theater was dark and gloomy, the empty seats covered with canvas. The figures on the stage looked weird and fantastic, the hollow, reverberating voices changing the scene from pantomime.

The girl darted a parting look of scorn at the stage manager, and sat before a small table, and between puffs at his cigar joined the musical director in angry shouts at the bewildered chorus.

"The brute," she said under her breath. "Does he think I will stand his abuse even to become a star. It's too dreadful. I will be later than this tomorrow. I will never come again."

"He didn't know what kept me late," she said, still talking to herself and referring to the stage manager as she went out on the street—"that I had that check cashed. Well, he'll scold somebody else now."

She took from her pocket a small white envelope bearing the postmark of a distant country town. For a second time she read the letter. "He'll come at 7. It is 4 now."

Half an hour later she was in her room, a hall bedroom on the third floor. "I am glad for once, it is on the alley," said the girl, tossing an empty lunch box out of the open window. "I shan't need this light housekeeping outfit any longer"—said with disgust—"I am going to live now on something more than bread and cheese and weak tea. But, maybe, I ought to leave the kerosene stove for the next poor 'shut-in' who will live here after me."

She dragged a small trunk from the closet and started to pack her clothes. "It's quick work," she said, with a bitter little laugh. "I haven't so many of them as I had when I came to the city six months ago. Where's my watch; it was pawned, and there are other articles in the same place that I shall never call for. But it doesn't matter now. I'm going home."

When the trunk was packed the girl made an attractive toilet, for the cloth street dress was well brushed and neat, and the sailor hat was new. It cost the girl a few dinners. She sat down on the side of the bed, and, for the third time, drew the letter from her pocket.

"Dearest daughter," it ran. "You have had your way. You wanted a career, to make a name for yourself. If the path is too thorny, and you are tired of the great, selfish city, one who follows this letter will tell you how we are waiting for you to come home. Father and Mother."

"There's a gentleman down stairs to see you, Miss Tremaine," said the maid pushing open the door which stood partly ajar.

"I am coming down," said the girl.

"And you will come back to the old life, Gracie?" said a big, sun-burned young man a few minutes later, holding the girl's small hand in his big brown one. "You will never want to leave us again?"

"I will never leave you again," said the girl.

The stage had lost a possible star, and a young country merchant had gained a wife.—Chicago Tribune.

DIPLOMACY HELPED HIM.

Stranded Musician Got Into a Profitable Line of Business.

"Diplomacy is a great quality," said a man who formerly lived in a very small Ohio town to the writer recently to the Washington Star. "A fellow can do nearly everything by the proper use of diplomacy except to rob a bank. I was just reading something about a volunteer organist that set me thinking about a neat little bit of diplomacy that lifted a good man from misfortune's ditch and put him in the way of doing something for himself. He was a musician with a small traveling show which came along and went to pieces in our town. The other people of the company got out of town by hook or crook, but this poor fellow couldn't make it. He got acquainted with several young fellows of the town, however, and to one of these he confided that he would make a living by teaching music if he could only get a start. He got acquainted with a society youth whose sister was church organist. He suggested that the young fellow have her get sick the next Sunday and send a note of apology and suggesting himself as her substitute. This was all carried out in proper form and when the time had arrived and the minister had apologized for the substitute the musician seated himself at the little organ and began. He started off with a voluntary in a sweet, expressive strain and worked it up to a noble burst of music which in varying phases swept along and held the congregation enchanted. Nobody had ever suspected the poor little organ capable of anything half as grand, and you may be sure that the musician overlooked no points. From that time on the church service was simply an accompaniment to the music, and when it was finished and the organ poured forth another flood of harmony for the congregation to retire on, everybody just stood and listened, and before the stranded musician left the church he knew all the good people in town and was made a social lion. It was easy enough after that. Being a man of good address and discretion and possessing gentlemanly refinement as well, he quietly went to work and soon had a lot of the best pupils in the town. Then the young fellows went after him for banjo and guitar lessons, and afterward they organized a band and made him leader. Everything came his way and he married the daughter of one of the rich men of the town, and, well, he runs the largest music store in the place now. All accomplished by a bit of diplomacy.

CONGENIAL COMPANIONSHIP.

Everyone on the Lookout for the Ideal Kindred Soul.

Congenial companionship is life-giving. There is no tonic bottled that can rival it. Men and women are constantly on the outlook for a kindred soul. The hunt is something after the order of a search for a needle in a haystack. It goes on despite the discouragements that attend it. Sweethearts think they have found this ideal union in each other and hasten on marriage that is to make two souls one. In less time than it takes to tell their story the pair are found at "outs." Love, with its burnished edge dimmed, grows less and less bright, until finally the dullness of its glory drives man and woman from the domestic hearth to find more congenial society. Girls at college swear by each other. A flicker of jealousy lights a fire unknown and the day dreams of each are scattered like chaff before the wind. Two lads chum it through school, only to discover as they approach manhood that neither one has a taste in common. A bond of complete sympathy binds some families together. How many? Daughters and sons go roaming through the world seeking that subtle kinship which home and its environments have denied them. Do they find it? Rarely.—Utica Saturday Globe.

Lord Morris's Wit.

Lord Morris, who has just had his life converted into a fullfledged barony in connection with the queen's birthday, traces his family a long way back, for the Morrises were one of the fourteen tribes of Galway, before the first of Lord Morris's ancestors, one Richard Morris was heard of as bailiff of Galwaye in 1486. As he says himself, "I think I can fairly say that no man drunk or sober ever mistook me for anything but an Irishman." And then again he has publicly declared that "half the difficulty of the Irish question arose from the efforts of a dull people to govern a quick-witted one."

Smart Cuff Links.

Newer than the pearl cuff buttons for wash waists are the crocheted cuff links. The white ones are of cotton and will wash with the waists. There are others in black and colors of silk. They are only seventy-five cents a pair, come from a smart shop, and are "something different."

HOW TO WEAR SHOES

CHARACTER LEARNED BY MEANS OF THE FOOTGEAR.

This Refers to Women But It Will No Doubt Apply to Men As Well—The Man Who Is Patiently Looking for The Ideal Girl.

"It gets me," said the man, "to know why women and girls are not more particular about the way they dress their feet. If they knew how much people noticed them, they would take more pains in buying their shoes than they do in buying their gowns. Every one knows that the man is more particular about the way he keeps his boots and shoes than a woman. As for me, the woman I marry must have pretty, well-dressed feet. I have never found any one yet who came up to my standard of excellence, and that's why I'm not married, I suppose.

"I did think I had found her once. I fell in love with one foot. That was where I made the mistake. It was some kind of an art exhibition. There was a screen at the door from one room to another, which was a few steps higher, and happening to look across the room, I saw below that screen the daintiest, most ladylike-looking foot, slender and delicate and refined, and wearing just the right kind of a shoe for that occasion—not a great heavy walking boot, and not a dancing shoe, but just right. Of course, you don't expect me to tell you just what it was. I am not in the shoe business, but I know when a girl wears a shoe that is in good taste.

"This foot that I fell in love with I saw just for an instant as the woman to whom it belonged drew it up to the other step and the screen hid her so that I hadn't the slightest idea who she was, young or old, hideous or beautiful. But I made up my mind I would find out. But you know how it is in a room filled with people—it is not always easy to get across it, especially if all your friends are there. By the time I reached the screen I almost gave up my foot for lost. You can't see a woman's foot in these long skirts she wears unless she is on the street. I suppose my divinity must have raised her dress as she went up the steps.

"I did find her after a time, but I had made a mistake. A man shouldn't fall in love with less than two feet, and he should see how they walk. There is everything in the way a woman walks. The woman whose foot I had admired—her feet were beautiful, too—walked in a listless way. She drew one foot after the other, languidly. That might mean that she was selfish, indolent, delicate or a number of other things. Just notice women who walk that way and see if I am not right.

"Then notice the woman who walks not exactly with a heavy step, but comes down flatfooted every time. She would make a good business manager, and she might know how to manage a housefull of servants, but she is too aggressive to be a comfortable person to get along with. It is all right for a woman to have opinions of her own; I like to see a woman who knows her own mind, and I would rather enjoy having her look after my ideas if she cared to, but you don't like to be knocked over even with ideas.

"Then there is the woman who has rather a heavy dragging step. That woman is sure to have round shoulders and stoop when she walks. She has to take time to think when she answers, and it takes her a long time to see a joke. She has large feet, and her shoes do not fit trimly. That is not the kind of woman I care to know. Then there is the woman who shakes the room when she walks. She may not be over plump, and she is very likely cheerful and jolly. You like her, but her chubby feet—they are sure to be short and broad—are not for you. She is a nice kind of wife for some other man, and you like to go and take dinner with him occasionally when you are in the mood for it, but she is not the ideal woman.

"The ideal always wears trim, suitable shoes, and she walks just as a woman who has the ideal feet, ideally dressed, should. She is sure to have rather slender feet that look flexible and make you think somehow of a pretty slender hand well gloved. Her shoes always fit her like a glove, anyway. She does not wear great mannish shoes around the street all the time because they are said to be fashionable. She only wears those with a heavy, rough walking suit. For the street she has a medium weight, trim-looking boot, and for the house she wears pretty, soft, thin ones or pretty slippers, anything, according to the occasion. There are times and seasons for all kinds of boots, shoes and slippers.

"I was on the Broadway car down near the Battery the other day when a plainly dressed woman was crossing the street. When I saw her first every one in the car, men and women, were looking at her. What was the trouble, do you suppose? She was holding up her skirts a little, and so exhibited a pair of what do you call 'em, with high heels and a buckle in front?—Louis Quinze slippers, isn't it?

"Now those are the prettiest thing a woman with a pretty foot can wear in an appropriate place, but they were out of place down there, and there was not a soul in the car that didn't notice them, and there was nothing about the woman otherwise to attract attention. I remember seeing a woman wearing low slippers on Fifth avenue not long ago, and every one who passed turned to look at her.

"My ideal girl wouldn't think of wearing a pair of shoes inappropriately. Her shoes always fit her so that she walks easily and well, with a rather quick, light step, and moves over the ground easily without jerkiness. You know she is a nice girl to get along with. She goes through life as smoothly and pleasantly as she walks. But she is not monotonous; you know that by her quick lightness. She always smiles at you and has a light answer ready whatever you say.

"I am looking for her and I shall find her some day. But it is surprising how quickly most women can be cut off the list when you have shoes and their concomitants as a test. You can find girls with pretty and well-dressed feet, but they are rare, and until I find the one you may put me down for a bachelor."—N. Y. Times.

Saved His Life.

Mr. J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death. In telling of it he says: "I was taken with typhoid fever that ran into pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected soon to die of consumption, when I heard of Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it and now am well and strong." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all throat and lung trouble. Regular sizes 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's drug store. Every bottle guaranteed.

No Right to Ugliness.

The woman who is lovely in face, form and temper will always have friends, but one who would be attractive must keep her health. If she is weak, sickly and all run down, she will be nervous and irritable. If she has constipation or kidney troubles, her impure blood will cause pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. Electric Bitters is the best medicine in the world to regulate stomach, liver and kidneys and to purify the blood. It gives strong nerves, bright eyes, smooth, velvety skin rich complexion. It will make a good looking, charming woman out of a run-down invalid. Only 50 cents at W. A. Schreiter's drug Store.

STILL HARMONIZING.

The Courier entered the fight against Prof. McNally on the plea of harmony. If anybody believed this was the real object of that sheet, the scales probably have fallen, after reading its last issue where the editors take the opportunity to give our ex-superintendent a jab. This resurrection of dead issues is scarcely the way to subserve harmony in our schools, and all honest citizens, who really have at heart the interests of the schools, will condemn the Courier's persistency in keeping up a fight that was supposed to have been settled. THE GAZETTE favors harmony in our schools. We favor facing the conditions that confront us, and of lending all possible moral support to the new administration. Nevertheless nothing could tend to opening up the old sores and renewing hostilities more than the unwarranted fling at Prof. McNally contained in the item of concentrated vindictiveness published in the Courier last week. Those of that gentleman's friends who have been prone to accept matters as they are, yet will hardly look on complacently when he is abused. No one but the Courier would deny to Prof. McNally the share of credit that is his due in the securing of the High School here. No doubt our schools will continue to progress, and there will be harmony, unless the Courier persists in disturbing it again, as it did last week.

If our friends down the street think, however, that they can do the schools any good by stirring up issues that are settled, we think they will find themselves mistaken. They, however, may have the pleasure of a perfect monopoly of that business. THE GAZETTE wants no part in it.

THE G. A. R.

The Grand Army of the Republic this week is holding one of the greatest encampments at Chicago, yet known in the history of that organization. The association is now thirty five years old, the first post having been organized April 6, 1866. As Commander Shaw recently said, it had no predecessor, and it can not have a successor. It sprung from conditions which are not likely to repeat themselves in any country or at any time. Since the reunion in Philadelphia, a year ago, 8,000 veterans of the civil war have passed away. The survivors, who gather year after year in ever dwindling numbers, show the marks of time. The long parade, which has always been the one imposing feature of each encampment, will this year be seen for probably the last time. The marching days for those boys in blue are over, and they begin, reluctantly to acknowledge themselves unequal to the strain. The annual encampments will be held for some years to come, but not for long, as the ranks are thinning fast.

The nation turns a fond gaze toward Chicago this week, and as we ponder, and the events of the fast receding years present themselves, a deep feeling wells up, that reminds us of the susceptibility of the human heart to "the touch of nature." May the declining days of the old soldiers be tranquil in proportion to the trials endured while fighting for the preservation of the Union.

At a meeting of the Populist national committee Monday the declination of Charles A. Towne as the vice presidential nominee of the party was accepted and Adlai E. Stevenson was put in his place. The vote was seventy one to twenty four.

FACTS AND FANCIES.

Warroad has now communication with the outside world, the telegraph line was finished as far as that place Wednesday.

St. Hilaire people got so interested in the Fitzsimmons-Ruhlin fight that bets were stacked up at every turn. Even the ladies took a hand and the Spectator, without giving particulars, leads people to believe that one of the latter cases was settled by a collar and shirt waist hair pulling match.

Chairman Stephens has announced the following Republican Polk county central committee: A. Kaiser, Fosston; T. S. Berg, McIntosh; Norman Hanson, Fertile; C. C. Melsness, Neilsville; Samuel Torrison, Fisher; T. A. Sullivan, East Grand Forks, C. A. Hitchcock, Crookston; H. B. Cudd, Beltrami; G. K. Espeseth, Erskine; H. E. Misner, Euclid.

The national committee of the Midroad Populists held a meeting in Chicago Monday, with 80 of the 116 members present in person or by proxy. National headquarters will be opened in Louisville. The mid road men claim they will elect two congressmen in Texas, two in Alabama, and one in Georgia, and Chairman Parker claims his party will poll a million votes.

A "round up" of exhibits and attractions reveals the fact that the State Fair of the present year will surpass the expectations and announcements of its officers. The Fair and the half rates announced by all the railways for that week, Sept. 3–8, seem to have been well advertised and an unusual attendance is expected. It will be the holiday week of the year.

Here in Minnesota a person cannot tell in what county a town is in by the name. For instance, Blue Earth City is not in Blue Earth county but in Faribault county, and Faribault is in Rice county, and Rice is in Benton county. Becker is not in Becker county but in Sherburn county, and Sherburn is in Martin county. Grant is not in Grant county but in Washington county, and Washington is in Fillmore county. Norman is in St. Louis county and St. Louis Park is in Hennepin county.

If you know an item, kindly tell us about it. Every week we tell what we know. Every week we know that you know things that we don't know. And we know that you know that we don't know it, and still you don't tell us. Now, if you tell us what you know, then we will tell you what we know and also what you know, and our readers will know what they know and what you know and also what we know and what we know that you know that we know you know.—Ex.

McKenzie and Mann, the railroad magnates, deny the story that they intend to build a through line from Winnipeg to Duluth. They also state that the report from the Pacific coast that they would build a line from Ontario to the coast with branch line to Dawson City is incorrect. They will continue the construction of the Rainy River road all winter and the 2,000 or 3,000 men engaged on the work now will not be discharged. They expect to reach Winnipeg with this road in 1901.

A Clay county farmer has a bin containing about 800 bushels of wheat. About a month ago he proposed to market the grain, but on going to the bin, he discovered that a hen had established her nest on the wheat, was setting there, and that to remove the grain would break her up. He decided not to disturb her, but wait until she came off with the chicks. In the mean time the price of wheat advanced until the farmer discovered that he had gained over $100 by allowing the hen to set it out. It sometimes pays to humor even the whims of a hen.

Work on the large county ditch which will empty into the Wild Rice river, two miles south of Halstad, has commenced, and will be finished in October. The completion of this great ditch will mark the beginning of a new epoch of prosperity among those who have heretofore lived on lands southeast of that village, which have been overflooded every year by the Wild Rice river, to the partial or total destruction of all crops except hay. This ditch will mean the moving of of all such surplus water into the Wild Rice near that place.

"The Boer war, in my opinion, is likely to last for two or three years, for if President Kruger and his burghers ever retreat into the mountains, Little Bobs will have to become a bigger man before he can hope to drink coffee with this new Henrik Hudson," says former U. S. Consul at Pretoria Macrum. "I do not consider the reported capture of Gen. Olivier a severe blow to the Boers. His capture will be regretted by his friends and countrymen. But so long as President Krueger is not taken the Boers will lack no strategy, and they have many generals to carry out that strategy to the amazement of the British staff."

The Minnesota State Board of grain and warehouse commissioners met Wednesday and agreed upon a basis of grades for this year. The rules of last wear were mainly renewed but a few changes were made. Last year it was allowed to mix with the number one hard wheat from the Red River Valley five percentage of red winter wheat. This resulted in loading the Red River Yalley wheat and virtually depressing its price. This has been changed this year by adopting the rule that any admixture of other wheat will cause it to grade as mixed winter wheat. This change in the rules will result to the advantage of the farmers.

Contracts have been let for the Brainerd & Northern extension from Bemidji. The distance planned to be covered is 90 miles. Foley Bros., of St. Paul, have secured most of the grading contract. Twenty-six miles will be built this fall. O'Malley & Hennessey have a subcontract for grading the first ten miles; B. F. Sullivan, four miles. The road will leave Bemidji west of town, but the exact route to be traversed has not yet been announced. It is believed that it will go by Buena Vista to a connection with the Halvorson Richards logging road at Nebish, branching from Buena Vista and running east to Black Duck Lake and thence northerly.

The Thief River Falls Commercial Club will have as its primary object the opening of that portion of the Red Lake reservation lying in Red Lake and Marshall counties. The citizens of the progressive city up the river mean business, and as they know how to go after a thing, when they are united, they may succeed in this. There are eight townships of the reservation in Red Lake county and twenty townships in the county already organized. It has been suggested that a line drawn on the south border of Bray, Sanders and Rocksbury, straight east to the Beltrami county line, comprising a total of fourteen townships, with Thief River Falls as the county seat, is the day dream of the Thief River Falls agitators. This would take six townships from Red Lake county as it exists to-day, but would add three, leaving Red Lake county still with seventeen townships. We do not think, if this is the object of Thief River Falls, that they would find any considerable opposition here, and in that event, Red Lake Falls would no doubt be found working hand in hand with its sister city, as the interests of the two places do not conflict, but on the other hand would be identical. When the situation is considered, it will be found that Thief River Falls and this city are not competitive points. Our territories are in separate spheres, that do not conflict.

Prof. J. T. Malone, who will be remembered as having taught for two years in our schools, has been elected principal of the Lake Park graded school, and the people down there can rest assured that they have made a wise choice. Prof. Malone has just returned from St. Paul, where he successfully passed the examination for a first grade professional certificate—the highest certificate within the gift of the state. The Gazette predicts a splendid career for this talented and worthy young man.

Wm. Findeisen took the Great Northern Friday for St. Paul, where he combined business with pleasure, meeting his wife and daughter on their return from Chicago, and laying in an immense supply of seasonable goods in the general implement line.

W. A. Case, of St. Hilaire, who is seeking the Republican nomination for county auditor, was in the city Monday and Tuesday. He says this is the first trip he has made solely on politics, but expects to be kept pretty busy from now on. Mr. Case is not an unfamiliar figure in the political arena of Red Lake County, having been an aspirant before the Populist convention for clerk of court two years ago, the plum going to Joseph Perrault of this city.

Miss Kate Stuhr yesterday returned from a week's stay at St. Paul, where she was the guest of her brother, Dr. Henry Stuhr, now practicing in the city hospital. She purchased a large millinery stock while in the city, which she expects to have on display in a few days. Miss Stuhr was accompanied by her niece, Miss Elsie Mead.

Louis Elsesser and E. H. Wachtel, of Philadelphia, representing the Independent View Company, have been photographing points of interest, residences, and business houses in the city this week. The company gets up albums of striking and historical scenery in the different states, and the employes do this other business on the side.

A severe hail storm passed over this section this morning. Barring the smashing of a few window lights, no other damage was done. About six inches of rain fell, and threshing operations are thus again delayed. Reports from Minneapolis and Duluth indicate that the continued wet weather is causing the wheat that is threshed and loaded into the cars in a wet state, to steam, and hundreds of carloads are grading as rejected, and bringing 40c in the market. In some cases the heat generated is so intense that a severe scalding is the penalty for one who runs his hand down into the grain a foot or two.

Misses Dahlgren and Conovan having resigned from our corps of teachers, Miss Nettie Gibson and Miss Alice Hickey were elected to the vacancies. Miss Gibson has the grammar room and Miss Hickey, who was in the High School work here last year, will be given one of the lower grades. This leaves one vacancy, which was left to the clerk and superintendent to fill.

A young man, more reckless than vicious, was taken before Justice Toupin yesterday for examination, with a view to his commitment to the state reformatory at Red Wing. The evidence adduced was laid before Judge Watts and he concurred with the local authorities in the opinion that the evidence against the boy was not sufficient to warrant his retention. He was disappointed, having expressed a desire to go in the hopes of receiving benefits which would result in his reformation. It would seem that a boy with these good intentions is better off outside the reformatory, if given proper encouragement.

RIOTS IN NEW YORK

WHITE MEN GO ON THE WARPATH FOR NEGROES.

The Shooting of a White Boy by a Negro Started the Trouble and the White Element Began to Search Out Negroes—Several Colored Men Attacked and Badly Beaten—Negroes Attempt to Rescue One of Their Number While in Custody of an Officer, but the Officer Holds the Mob at Bay Until Assistance Arrives.

New York, Aug. 28. — A number of incipient race riots broke out here yesterday, the direct cause being the shooting on Saturday of John Brennan, a white messenger boy, by John Davis, alias "Lamplighter," a negro. Brennan was one of a crowd of boys who taunted Davis and a bullet from the black man's gun lodged in the stomach of Brennan. He was taken to a hospital and is expected to die. The shooting becoming noised about the whole white element began to search out negroes. Before daybreak yesterday morning James Arnold, colored, while passing Sixty-fourth street and Amsterdam avenue, was attacked by a crowd of whites and badly beaten. He was treated at a hospital. Shortly afterward about two blocks away the gang doled out to Alexander Ballentine, a colored man who was passing quietly along. In neither case were arrests made. At 9:30 in the morning a crowd of whites, led by Frank McPike, twenty-four years of age, went to a five-story tenement of Sixtieth street, occupied by negroes, with the avowed intention of cleaning it out. They had about demolished the windows and incidentally cracked a head or two when the police arrived. McPike and another man were arrested. At 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon Joseph Doyle, eighteen years of age, filled his hat with stones and took his stand at Fifty-ninth street and Eleventh avenue. He succeeded in inflicting scalp wounds on two colored men before a policeman clubbed and arrested him. Officer John F. Cleary

A Similar Experience

Placed Under Arrest

for "being sassy" William Hopson, a colored man. He rashly undertook to take his prisoner to the station through West Sixtieth street. This street between West End and Amsterdam avenues is called "Cuckoo Row," and here colored people live by the hundreds. The fact that one of their race was in the hands of a policeman was all that several of them wanted and half a dozen of them thought they would release Hopson. Cleary used his club and then drew his revolver and threatened to shoot the first man to make a move. In this way he held the mob at bay until other policemen came to his aid. They arrested George Meyer, also colored. Cleary said he started the attempted rescue. Meyer all the way to the station and when he got there he had several scalp wounds. One in particular was very large and it is thought the negro's skull is fractured. William and Henry Rapp, brothers, white, were arrested and locked up on complaint of Adam Johnson, colored, who claimed they had stoned him.

The above are only a few assaults which came to light by arrests. The fact is that all day long the police in the neighborhood mentioned were kept busy dispersing small mobs bent on mischief. The consequence is that the force is unusually alert and prepared to cope with any serious trouble should it break out.

CHAPTER OF TRAGEDY.

Dallas, Tex., Has a Number of Casualties.

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 28.—James Daniel was accidentally shot in the left side and in the groin during an affray yesterday between John Bonner and Clement Long, neither of whom was hit. Daniel was mortally wounded.

James Boston stabbed Jennie Lepaw twice in the right eye, destroying the sight.

John Thrasher last night struck a small boy on a street car. The boy's brother stabbed Thrasher in the back, inflicting a probably fatal wound.

Gus Roehel, a saloonkeeper from Fort Worth, committed suicide here by shooting himself through the head.

John Albert, a contractor, fell in the street from excessive heat yesterday afternoon and died in a few minutes.

SWAMPED IN AWFUL STORM.

Score of Fishermen Lose Their Lives on Gulf of Georgia.

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 28. — There was a high gale on the Gulf of Georgia Friday night and Saturday. Five overturned fishing smacks were found with the sails flat in the water about fifteen miles from Vancouver. The occupants were undoubtedly drowned. Each boat contained from two to five fishermen.

Russia Buys Beef.

Chicago, Aug. 28. — Armour & Co. have received and order from the Russian government for 6,000,000 pounds of beef "on the hoof" to feed the soldiers of the czar in China. This is the largest order of the kind in the history of the Chicago meat trade. Options were said to have been taken up on every available ship in carrying trade on the Pacific. It will take 5,000 fatted cattle to fill the order. The cattle will be sent from San Francisco via Hawaii and Japan.

Relief of Famine Sufferers.

New York, Aug. 28.—The American National Red Cross announces that under the powers conferred upon it by the last congress it will at once begin active work for the relief of those suffering from famine in India. Headquarters for this branch of relief work will be opened in this city.

Destroyed by Fire.

Kingfisher, Okla., Aug. 28. — The court house and several adjoining buildings were destroyed here by fire yesterday causing a loss of $50,000.

CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

New York Physician Finds a Way to Induce Sleep.

A well known New York physician, who suffered from insomnia for many years, has found out a brand new method whereby sleep can be instantly obtained. The doctor has tried it on himself and on his patients, and has never known it to fail. It is essentially self-asphyxiation, and yet there is no possibility of danger.

A long breath is first taken and the air is kept in until positive discomfort is felt, which is slowly exhaled. This is repeated a second and a third time, and in a minute or so the patient will be asleep.

The theory of sleep that finds the widest acceptance is that sleep is occasioned by exhaustion of the nutrition of the brain, due to its functional activity when awake. During sleep there is a flow of nutrition to the brain, consequently an increase of blood to supply its deficiencies. By holding the breath the head and brain become intensely congested with venous blood loaded with carbonic acid. The carbonic acid and the other chemical products which venous blood contains act on the nerve tissues, producing sleep, and the same as ether and chloroform produce artificial sleep.

If you are truly brain weary do not try to replace the thoughts with others, but make the mind a blank as far as possible. If the brain is excited turn it to monotonous thoughts, recite poems or verses, or go over a journey which you very much enjoyed, recalling even the most trifling incidents. Physicians are more and more arriving at the conclusion that the way of treating insomnia is not by means of drugs. There is always the danger of forming the drug habit, and in most cases drugs are not necessary. If noises inside the house or outside disturb one, putting cotton in the ears will be found to give relief. Those who are troubled with sleeplessness should retire at a regular hour each night. If there is a fear of not being able to sleep that keeps one awake one should feign not to want it, and one will be surprised to find how quickly sleep comes. Always take a slight meal before retiring to rest. A vast number of cases of insomnia are caused by empty stomachs.

WHY SHE WAS CAREFUL.

Wasn't Certain That the Prisoner Was Her Daughter and the Reason.

Two days go there was at the police matinee an old negro woman who was a leading witness against a younger woman, who was said to be her daughter. The old woman had sworn that "Ter de best ob her b'lief the girl was not her daughter." This puzzled the Recorder no little, and it being necessary to get more witnesses, the case was postponed until yesterday.

Yesterday afternoon Miranda Johnson was again arraigned for acting in a disorderly manner and the old woman was present. Several witnesses swore positively that the prisoner was the old woman's child, and the Recorder turned to the old woman and said:

"Old woman, why did you appear to be in doubt about Miranda being your daughter the other day?"

"Lawd bless yer, honey, Ise still in doubt 'bout dat matter," was the reply.

"Why?" asked the Recorder who felt that he had a great mystery before him.

"Bekase," replied the old woman, "dar wus er missbur ob two babies er long time ago and de matter hain't el'ar till this day. You see my little baby was born on de same day dat annudder nigger 'oman's baby was er born and jest to play a joke on Ike—dat's my ole man—dey put de two babies wid me and tole him dat be war de fadder ob twins. Dey got de babies kinder mixed, and dey jest gib me one ob dem and gihbed de udder 'oman de udder baby. And I doan know till dis day whedder dey gibbed me de right baby er not. Dat am de r'ason dat I hain't gwine ter sw'ar reckless like 'bout dis gal in de cote."

"I am going to fine Miranda $10.75," announced the recorder "and, old woman, if you think she is your daughter you can pay the fine, and if you think she is not, you can let her work in the stockade for three weeks."

The old woman gave herself the benefit of the doubt and Miranda is working three weeks in the stockade.—Atlanta Constitution.

Pockets in Stockings.

Stocking pockets are the latest fad, a New York dry goods man said the other day. They are made to hold a roll of bills, jewelry and valuables that can be stored away in a small space. The pockets are worked into the top of the hose, above the knee, and are made with a fastening, so that there is no danger of their contents falling out. There are so many sneak thieves who steal from bedrooms while the family is at dinner, from carriages and from other places where women are obliged to leave their money and jewelry when they are not in use, that the safe receptacle about the clothing of the owner is an absolute necessity. Pockets are not generally found in women's dresses, and the stocking pocket has suggested itself to some inventive genius. It looks as if these new pockets would be as safe as any that could be devised.

His Heart Displaced.

Dr. J. Sheldon Wright, who attended Martin Welge, 19 years old, after he was knocked down by a Brooklyn trolley car, was a witness for the boy the other day in his suit against the company to recover $25,000 in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn. The physician testified that when he was called to attend Welge he found his heart displaced. It was suspended by a fibre and vibrated like a pendulum, swinging fully two inches to and fro. When Dr. Sheldon was called in he had little hope of his patient's recovery. Since then he has somewhat improved.

Mushroom Vaccination.

A French scientist has found that some kinds of mushroom afford a vaccine against the venom of snakes. The juice of the mushroom renders a person immune against the poison for a month or two.

Proportion of Students.

In Germany one man in 213 goes to college; in Scotland, one in 520; in the United States, one in 2,000, and in England, one in 5,000.

NEW WAY TO FELL TREES.

Saws Fast Taking the Place of Axes in Maine Woods.

The lumbermen are making a decided departure this season in the method of cutting down trees, using saws instead of axes in felling them.

Up to last year the axe alone was used by the lumbermen in the Maine woods. Only the most expert men did this part of the work, and men spent years in the Maine woods before they were considered skillful enough to become part of the crew employed in felling trees. By the time a man became a chopper he felt like a second lieutenant. On account of the number of years spent in learning this part of the business the choppers intrusted with felling trees made unusual good wages, the best receiving nearly double the amount paid those who were a part of the crew who took care of the timber after it had fallen.

That method of felling trees has been found by the lumbering companies to be very expensive, both on account of the time required to fell each tree and the wages paid. Last year the experiment of cutting down the trees with saws was tried and found so successful that this year only a small share of the men sent into the woods are expert choppers, or if they are expert choppers they are not sent in with the understanding that they are to use their axes in cutting down trees, but rather in trimming the limbs after the trees have fallen, or in cutting up the trees into lengths for handling in the log drives.

There is another gain, that of time and wages. It is in the amount of timber saved on the stump. Formerly it was a common thing to see all over a lot stripped of tree stumps from one to three feet above the ground. This part of the tree was the very best, both because it was free from knots and because it was the largest part of the tree in girth. By using the saw the trees may be cut off nearer the ground and a big saving made.

The saw used is slightly different from the old cross-cut saw, the teeth being of a pattern fitted to that work.—Maine Special in Boston Herald.

Not a Heart Stimulant.

The idea that alcohol is a heart stimulant has been thoroughly shown to be a fallacy. Alcohol is an anesthetic, a narcotic and a depressing agent. It at first seems to increase the heart vigor by its paralyzing effect upon the vasomotor centers, resulting in dilatation of the small arteries, so lessening the work of the heart, but its real effect is to lessen sensibility and paralyze, no matter what the dose or the condition in which it is given. We do not want substitutes for alcohol, but we want something which will accomplish the effect of heat over the heart, as a flannel cloth wrung out of hot water has a wonderful stimulating effect upon the heart. Slapping the chest, applications of heat to the spine, hot and cold sponging to the spine, hot fomentations to the head, rubbing the surface from the extremities toward the heart—these are the most effective of all measures for stimulating a flagging heart. The writer speaks thus confidently, after having employed the measures named for the last 25 years, and with a degree of success which has left no desire to return to alcohol and other so-called stimulants.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

You Taste With Your Eyes.

The sense of taste is divided into three sections, each of which has under its charge the distinguishing of a special class of tastes. The fore part is chiefly sensible to pungent and acid tastes, the middle portion to sweets and bitters, and the back part to the flavor of roast meat, butter and rich and fatty substances. Recent experiments, however go to show that the tongue has less to do with what we call taste than is generally supposed. Our notions as to flavor are greatly helped by the sense of sight, smell and touch. Blindfold your eyes and hold your nose, and you will find it very difficult to tell whether you are drinking tea or coffee. Of course your tongue is absolutely helpless in distinguishing between one substance and another if your nose does not do its part, which is about four-fifths of the work. Thus you really taste with your eyes and nose.—Answers.

New Champion Globe Trotter.

It is, of course, only to be expected that the new championship for globe trotting should belong to an Ohio man. John W. Bookwalter, a rich manufacturer of Springfield, Ohio, has traveled all over America, Europe, Africa and most of Asia. He is now on his way to Thibet, the unknown land to the capital of which a white man has never been permitted to penetrate. In the last two years he has traveled 25,000 miles in Central Asia. Mr. Bookwalter will go to Thibet with an exploring party sent out by the Russian government. He not only expects to reach the Thibetian capital, but he is planning for an interview with the Grand Llama, the head of the Buddhist religion. Mr. Bookwalter believes that Russia is about to take possession of Persia and all the other countries bordering on India. He also predicts that Russia, China and England will form an alliance and divide Asia among them.

They Got Around the Will.

John Wagonmaker and Miss Alice Crookston were married at Palmyra, Pa., recently. By consent of the courts the groom instead of the wife changed his name, and he is now Mr. Crookston. This was effected because the bride was bequeathed a fortune by a relative who provided that no person not bearing the name of Crookston should inherit the money.

Prefer the Old Way.

The suggestion made by the Denver Humane Society that women gave up the use of side saddle and sit astride when riding horseback, is meeting with marked opposition. The most powerful, if not the principal objection, is that no dress could be devised for the innovation that would be as becoming as that now in use.

It has been discovered that the profession of prompter is more suited to women than to men, as their voices carry better across the stage and are less audible in the auditorium.

SILK HAT CAUSED A RIOT.

It Was the First of Its Kind Seen on the Streets of London.

Jan. 15, 1797, was the date fixed by Mr. Hetherington for the first appearance in public with the new hat, the silk hat of to-day, says the Hatters' Gazette. He believed that in the natural course of events he would create a sensation, but he was not prepared for the commotion which followed. It was with no little trepidation that, about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, Mr. Hetherington emerged from his shop in the Strand. His family advised against it, but he was determined, and forth he sallied.

The Strand, as now, was one of the busy streets of London and Mr. Hetherington had not walked ten feet before merchants and others, attracted by the unusual sight, stopped and gazed in wonder. Mr. Hetherington, however, moved on, but men who had only stopped to look now followed after him and in less time than it takes to tell it the street was crowded was a howling mob. Those on the outskirts of the crowd did not know the nature of the trouble, if there was any, but they helped to swell the din. How Mr. Hetherington fared, however, is best told by the journal's of that date, whose pages have been searched by the tailors' and cutters' special commissioner. One Gazette gave this account of the remarkable event:

"John Hetherington, haberdasher of the Strand, was arraigned before the lord mayor yesterday on a charge of breach of the peace and inciting a riot and was required to give bond in the sum of £500. It was in evidence that Mr. Hetherington, who is well connected, appeared upon the public highway wearing upon his head what he called a silk hat (which was offered in evidence), a tall structure having a shining luster and calculated to frighten timid people. As a matter of fact the officers of the crown stated that several women fainted at the unusual sight, while children screamed, dogs yelped and a young son of Cordwainer Thomas who was returning from a chandler's shop, was thrown down by the crowd which had collected and had his right arm broken. For these reasons the defendant was seized by the guards and taken before the lord mayor. In extenuation of his crime defendant claimed that he had not violated any law of the kingdom, but was merely exercising a right to appear in a headdress of his own design—a right not denied by any Englishman."

Another paper of the same date (Jan. 16, 1797) in commenting upon Mr. Hetherington's appearance said:

"In these days of enlightenment it must be considered an advance in dress reform, and one which is bound sooner or later to stamp its character upon the entire community. The new hat is destined to work a revolution in headgear, and we think the officers of the crown erred in placing the defendant under arrest."

Peculiarities in Eyesight.

A Chicago oculist, who has made a close study of the visual organs of his patients, has come to the conclusion that most people are right or left-sighted, as they are right or left handed: He now regards it as an established fact that we all use one eye—the right or left—in preference when looking through a glass or taking an aim with a gun. If we do not perceive this ourselves oculists and opticians remark it. The ignorance of most people on this subject is illustrated by their buying glasses at the optician's without taking account of any difference between the eyes. Thus only one of the eyes is helped, while the other one, being less called into exercise, becomes less and less useful and loses its power, as a tool rusts when not in use.

Yet both our eyes are needed to see well. It becomes, therefore, highly important to observe how the child uses its eyes in order to correct those attitudes which tend to injury of the sight as well as the health. Children in writing rarely fail to give the head an inclination by which the eyes are placed at unequal distances from the paper. They are also apt to incline their head too far and acquire the habit of bringing it too near, as when they try to accommodate themselves to a feeble light. Not sufficient attention is given to these matters, especially when we consider the consequences of such habits in mature age.

A large proportion of our defects originate in want of proper care during childhood. We do wrong to such wonderful tools as our senses when we do not give them the education they need. It is not surprising that parents who are so particular about the way their children hold their spoon or fork pay so little attention to the way they use their eyes.

Fish That Sport Double Tails.

Two tails attached to a fish! Few people have ever seen such a freak of nature. Nearly every one has seen the pretty bushtail goldfish that have four or five, or sometimes more, long, wavy, filmy tails, but very few people know but that very few of them are born that way. When the little goldfish are very, very young their flesh is as clear as glass, so that one can see every bone in their tiny bodies. At this time the few that are born with two or more tails are put by themselves, and then a queer looking old Jap, with a great magnifying glass fastened in front of his eye, and wee sharp tools handy, reaches down under the water and cuts off the tails of the plain little fish, and then three or four of these tails are jointed on the back bone where the one was cut off and fastened there with tiny bandages until they grow fast.

The Japanese, who are very skilful in queer things of this kind, grow the finest goldfish in the world, and it is a very good business, for very fine fish of this kind often bring as much as $300 to $700, and one sold not long ago for $1,000.

COUNTY NEWS NOTES.
BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS.

Wylie.

J. C. McKercher has fixed up the granary on his farm.

A Fosston wind stacker arrived here last Friday from Crookston for Naplin Bros.

Chas. J. Larson and Ole T. Romsos made a flying visit to Red Lake Falls last Saturday.

Charley Eklund started to thresh last Friday, but was stopped by the rain. He expects to get a Maple Bay straw stacker.

Naplin Bros. started to thresh last Thursday on Chas. Lindquist's farm. The yield was between twelve and thirteen bushels to the acre.

Eric Adolphson left last Friday for Ishpeming, Michigan, where he will work in the mines the coming winter. Mr. Adolphson was one of the farmers who was hailed out Saturday, August 4.

In India, the land of famine, thousands die because they can not obtain food. In America, the land of plenty many suffer and die because they cannot digest the food they eat. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests what you eat. It instantly relieves and radically cures all stomach troubles. W. A. Schreiter.

Wylie is brushing up. The Red Lake Falls Milling Company has painted its elevator: the St. Anthony & Dakota have put a gasoline engine in their elevator, and the agent. J. Thill, is building a fine residence on the north side of the track. O. T. Romsos has fixed up his store after the fire, and C. G. Borgen has put up a new chimney on his store.

In the vicinity north of here, the young people are complaining of the quietness that has prevailed among them during the summer's dry and "mosquitoless" moonlight evenings. Some of the young men are complaining of the scarcity of young ladies, which means that a good many of them have to be without partners at parties, picnics, etc. We have, however, been informed that there have been some evening parties, but so carefully arranged in every detail, that the young men as guests have each had a partner, and had enjoyable evenings. People growing more careful and even cautious, we expect to find a future invitation to read something like this: "Great game party tonight. Only those with sisters need come."

Sanders.

Mrs. N. K. Anderson has been on the sick list with rheumatism for four weeks but is now moving about again.

Marcus Johnson, the Red Lake Falls miller, was up this way last week, looking after his farm lands and calling on N. K. Anderson.

Ole Christianson started shock threshing at A. C. Nelson's last Friday. He is taking a shock threshing run on the line between Sanders and Bray.

Rev. A. W. Lunde and his mother, Mrs. John Lunde, were calling in the neighborhood Saturday. As usual, sunshine and happiness followed in their wake.

Some sickness was reported last week among the threshing crew with R. Aaseby, owing to the hot weather. Mr. Aaseby and Staal Nordgaard were among the victims.

Miss Ida Anderson was home on a visit, last Wednesday and looking for hired girls for the Brush farm at Angus. She reports soft travelling for the binders over there, also.

R. Aaseby has been doing a week's threshing in the neighborhood of A. W. Lind's and reports a good turnout on wheat. O. L. Larson got 17 bushels of wheat to the acre.

A good many farmers around here are stacking their grain and are about done stacking, feeling very happy to see their crops safe after the heavy rains, which threatened to destroy the results of their year's labor.

Come hither, O maiden fair and faithful,
The desire of thy heart is granted,
Before thee, are the gates of unknown beauty free,
'Tis Rocky Mountain Tea.

Fables of the Rail--10.

A millionaire was sitting in his humble mansion one day when the head butler brought in a telegram from his business partner informing him that his cashier had stolen all the money in the vault. This was sad because the poor millionaire had on the morrow to pay his wife's millinery bill and he saw bankruptcy staring him in the face

Moral—If he had spent his money traveling on the North-Western Line it would not have been stolen by his cashier.

Hill Top.

Shock threshing was delayed on account of the rain.

The average yield of Lu. Yahnke's wheat was 25 bushels to the acre.

H. C. Gerlach drove to Terrebonne last week to patronize the mill, and returned home with a big load of flour.

The farmers tried to cut the wages on D. J. Gerlach's machine. The result was a strike, and the crew left for town.

Chinese are dangerous enemies, for they are treacherous. That's why the Counterfeits of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve are dangerous. They look like DeWitt's, but instead of the all-healing witch hazel they all contain ingredients liable to irritate the skin and cause blood poisoning. For piles, injures and skin deseases use the original and genuine DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. W. A. Schreiter.

Brooks.

The last rain delayed threshing about three days.

Miss Alice Beaudry began teaching in Dist. No. 9, Lambert, Monday.

Arthur Laniel made a business trip to Red Lake Falls Saturday.

Napoleon Hince, of Lambert, passed through here Sunday on his way to Badger.

Mrs. Joe Cyr was very ill last week but is improving greatly under the eminent care of Dr. Tessier.

N. Primo has moved his house from the Lagasse farm to his farm in the southern part of this township.

Mr. and Mrs. Eddy Hebert, Moses Guerard, and Mrs. Cyrille Lussier drove to Grand Forks last week, having been called there by the illness of Regis Guerard, who was then very low. At last accounts he was improving.

The wolf in the fable put on sheep's clothing because if he travels in his own reputation he couldn't accomplish his purpose. Counterfeiters of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve couldn't sell their worthless salves on their merits, so they put them in boxes and wrappers like DeWitt's. Look out for them, Take only DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. It cures piles and all skin diseases. W. A. Schreiter.

Bray.

Ole Christianson arrived from Ringbo, Marshall county, Thursday evening, and started threshing Friday morning.

Chas. Johnson and wife, and Adolph Johnson arrived from Warren Saturday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Sarah Swanson.

It will surprise you to experience the benefit obtained by using the dainty and famous little pills known as DeWitt's Little Early Risers. W. A. Schreiter.

Mrs. Sarah Swanson passed away Friday morning after about seven months' illness, at the age of 75 years. Deceased was the mother in law of the late J. F. Swanson, and her remains were laid to rest in the Swedish Lutheran cemetery Sunday evening.

FULL REPORT OF THE DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.

COUNTY TICKET, AND JAS. MEEHAN INDORSED FOR REPRESENTATIVE.

Below will be found a full report of the Democratic convention held in this city Thursday, the principal business of which was transacted after The Gazette was printed. It is a noteworthy occurrence, and RedLake is probably the only county in the state where fusion has not been effected between the Democrats and Populists. It is noticeable that the resolutions adopted are mum as to Daly, and that Daly was not present at the convention, although he attended the Populist convention. All these points are being discussed with considerable interest by the politicians and others.

The convention was called to order by W. T. Spillane, county chairman. H. W. Lee, of Thief River Falls, was elected chairman, and V. L. Knight, of this city, secretary.

The chair appointed committees, as follows:

On credentials, W. T. Spillane, P. Paradis, Chas Kankel W. Fuller and Pat Ford.

On resolutions, E. M. Hoff, C. L. Taylor, J. W. McGinty, John Morgan, Francis Shunn.

A recess of twenty minutes was hereupon taken to allow the committees to prepare their reports.

The committee on credentials reported the following delegates entitled to seats in the convention:

Black River, Pat Ford, John King.

Gervais, Francis Shunn, Henry Patnaude.

North, Theo. Jacobson

Polk Centre, W. H. Scribner.

Poplar River, J. W. McGinty, R. E. Landes.

River Falls, Frank Ford, John Ford.

Red Lake Falls township, John Alstadt.

Red Lake Falls city, First ward, C. L. Taylor, Jos. Tsebirhardt, Fred J. Taylor.

Second ward, Fred Borchers, J. P. Harren, J. M. Bray.

Third ward, W. T. Spillane, V. L. Knight, Ben Rosch.

Numedal, Jas. Meehan (accredited).

St. Hilaire, E. M. Hoff, P. G Paradis.

Terrebonne, Chas. Kankel, Ed Granger.

Thief River Falls city, First ward, C. C. Jackson, H. W. Lee.

Second ward, John Morgan, W. B. Fuller.

Third ward, F. J. Carnousek, Fred Halter.

The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

> We, the Democrats of Red Lake County, in convention assembled, assert our steadfast belief in the national Democratic platform as adopted at Kansas City on the 4th of July, 1900.
> We are opposed to the imperialism and militarism of the present administration, and condemn the Republican party for forcing upon the people of this liberty loving country a standing army, thus creating a debt and tax that shall burden our posterity for generations.
> We further condemn the Republican administration for forcing upon the people of Cuba and Porto Rico an administration of affairs which has taught the people of these lands that the first principle of Republican office holders is rapine and robbery, and that a public office under the McKinley administration is not a public trust, but a private pilfering snap.
> We believe it contrary to the fundamental principles of our constitution that a government should be forced upon the Cubans, Porto Ricans or Filipinos without their consent, and that a people, who for a hundred years have been struggling for independence, should be granted this sacred right.
> We demand the withdrawal of our troops from China, to the end that no entangling alliances be forced upon us with the despotic powers of Europe.
>
> We are opposed to the accumulation of capital in the form of trusts, and condemn the present administration for fostering and protecting all combinations, and permitting wealth to discourage and crush the ambitions of the young business men of limited means.
> We have the utmost confidence in the ability of our standard bearer, and look upon our candidate as the exemplification of honesty, ability and reform, and heartily commend to all independent voters the Hon. W.J. Bryan.
> We commend the wise and honest administration of Governor Lind, and especially indorse his efforts to make corporations pay their just share of taxes.
> We abhor centralization of power whether in state or national or county affairs, and call upon all independent voters to support the Democratic party of Red Lake county in its endeavor to crush ring rule as exemplified in the Middle of the Road convention recently held in this city.
> We heartily recommend Jas. Meehan Jr. for the Legislature for this, the 61st district.
> Respectfully submitted,
> John Morgan.
> J. W. McGinty.
> C. L. Taylor.
> E. M. Hoff.

After the resolutions were presented and adopted, nominations for county officers were made, as follows:

Auditor, B. E. Burkee, of St. Hilaire.

Treasurer, Jake Thill, Polk Centre.

Register of deeds, Edonor Perusse, of Terrebonne.

Superintendent of schools, left vacant, there having been no candidate before the convention except Frank Jeffers, the Populist nominee, and the Democrats were not indorsing Populists.

Dan Linnehan, of this city, and E. H. Draper, of Thief River Falls, each received 15 votes for sheriff, and the gentlemen agreed to allow a flip of a coin to decide it. Linnehan was the lucky man, and the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the convention for him.

For Judge of Probate, J. T. Knight of Red Lake Falls, and S. T. Johnson, of Thief River Falls, were placed in nomination. Knight received 20 votes, and Johnson, 10, whereupon the nomination was made unanimous.

Following this, the remainder of the nominations were made without a contest.

Attorney, H. W. Lee, of Thief River Falls.

County surveyor, Day F. Stacy.

Coroner, Dr. I. Lemieux.

No nominations were made for county commissioners.

Delegates to the state convention were then named as follows:

Chas. Robeckke, Jos. Helm, P. G. Paradis, J. W. McGinty, Chas. O. Kankel, S. T. Johnson, Dan Linnehan, W. T. Spillane, Jas. Meehan Jr., John Morgan, J. P. Harren, J. M. Bray.

A legislative committee of five, to call a legislative convention, was named by the chair; as follows: John Morgan, E. M. Hoff, Fred Taylor, Jas. Meehan Jr., W. T. Spillane.

WILL BUILD A JAIL.

Commissioners of Red Lake Co. At Last Provide What Has Long Been a Crying Need.

A special meeting of the board of county commissioners convened at the office of the county auditor Monday, and a recess was taken to Sept. 4th.

The matter of building a jail was taken into consideration, and a resolution was carried to build a four cell jail. The building is to be of brick, fireproof, 24x32, and will cost in the neighborhood of $3000. Architect Strassburger was present and submitted plans. A committee of three, Demana, Hansen and Sutor, will look after the construction. The building will be located on Oak Point. Otto Zaiser has the contract for furnishing the rock for the foundation, and Ernest Buse will bring the cells from Crookston, where they are at present.

Zaiser receives $4.50 per cord, wall measure, and Buse, $150 for delivering the cells.

$150 was appropriated to aid the city of Thief River Falls in planking the bridge.

The school petitions of of Ole J. Johnson and Alphonse LaComb and others, were granted.

A batch of bills was allowed, several assessments corrected, and the meeting adjourned.

Death of John Sortedahl.

A friend of the late John Sortedahl, whose death was briefly chronicled in The Gazette last week, hands us the following:

John Sortedahl died at the residence of his brother, M. O. Sortedahl, of the Bank of Red Lake Falls, in the 29th year of his age.

Thus death came suddenly to one of our brightest and most promising young men. He had spent the years after his graduation at the Mankato Normal school in the work which would prepare him for his chosen profession, and had come here to spend the summer, preparatory to entering the University law school for his second year in the course. But "There is a destiny which shapes our end, rough hew them as we may," and his friends here who looked forward to his graduation with honors, and appreciated so much his help for the summer, were compelled to take that long, sad journey back to the old home at Kenyon, Minn., and lay all that was mortal of John in the family burying ground, where sleep the friends who have gone before, and shall meet him "Beyond the River."

There has not been a sadder funeral in our city for many days. The sudenness of the death, the fact that a young and useful life had been cut off just as it seemed to be reaching its period of full usefulness. A stranger to many, yet his dignified manner and cultured habit had impressed all who knew this young man that he had a bright future before him.

After a brief private service at the house, the remains were taken to the Presbyterian church, where a large number of sympathizing friends met to show their respect as well to the memory of the departed, as for the brother and sister who were the only relatives of the young man present.

After a short address from Pastor Moore on the words of Jesus "Thy brother shall live again," the service was closed by the choir rendering the 23d Psalm with the beautiful chorus to the last verse

"Home, home, sweet home,
And in God's house forever more
My dwelling place shall be."

Mr. and Mrs. Sortedahl took the remains of their brother with them to their old home, on Friday. This home going is made particularly sad as this is the second time within a few short months that the rider of the "Pale horse" has stood before the door of the old home.

They carry with them the sympathy of their many friends in Red Lake Falls.

A CARD.

We desire by this means sincerely to thank the friends and neighbors who were so kind to us in the sickness and death of our brother, John. We also wish to thank the Pastor and choir of the Presbyterian church for their kind efforts to make this last sad service consoling and strengthening to us. These friendly helpings and this beautiful service will remain bright spots, even in this vale of tears.

Mr. and Mrs. M. O. Sortedahl.

The Selects Win.

The first of the series of three games between the Red Lake Falls and Crookston teams was played here Tuesday afternoon, and the Selects were victors, winning the game in the last inning. The second game will be played at Crookston tomorrow, and the third game at Grand Forks, Saturday. A number of our citizens will witness both games, and do a little rooting for the home team.

Following is the score by innings:

Crookston—	0	1	2	0	0	1	0	1	0	—5

Earned runs—Selects, 2; Crookston, 3; two base hits, Zalusky, Lacnapelle; struck out, by Ferrell, 8; by Bradish, 6; bases on balls, off Ferrell, 2; off Bradish, 2; time, two hours.

The game was very ably umpired by Attorney McIntyre, of this city.

Yu, governor of the province of Shensi, is reported to have invited the foreigners in his province to come to his protection. About Aug. 5 some 50 accepted the invitation and all were massacred.

Serious charges are made against some of the foreign troops engaged in China. Ravages, murder and robbery are said to be a common occurrence and in some instances unoffending natives are used as targets.

In the interest of early restoration of peace and order and the facilitation of negotiations with the Chinese government, Russia has proposed so the powers of the world that they withdraw their troops from Peking.

An early withdrawal from Peking by the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France and Russia may be anticipated, and it is not believed to be probable that Germany and Italy would take the responsibility of remaining alone.

It is rumored at Shanghai that the Japanese gained a great victory over the Boxers and Chinese troops between Peitsang and Ho Wun Si Thursday, Aug. 23. The story says that 1,500 Chinese were killed, including Prince Tuan, and all the Chinese were driven back into Chi Li.

The German government is considerably embarrassed by the joint proposition of Russia and the United States to withdraw from Peking and to recognize Li Hung Chang as an intermediary. It was wholly unexpected at Berlin that Russia would join the United States in such a step.

The Chinese negotiations remain unchanged. It is stated that no conclusion has been reached as to the last phase, namely, the Russian proposition of withdrawal. As to the proposition to recognize Li Hung Chang as an envoy, the negotiations remain at a standstill, no conclusion having been reached.

SPOOK FURNITURE.

If Not This, Then What Could It Be? —A Peculiar Story.

A singular story is related by the New Orleans Times-Democrat. It was told by a well-known professional man at a stag dinner, and the unusual experience stated in his own words is well worth repeating:

"In the spring of 1892," he said, "I was living in a house in North Rampart street, which I had taken on a one-year's lease, expecting to build. Our family consisted of myself and wife, our little boy, then only 5 years old, and my unmarried sister. The house was a two-story brick, which had been built before the war and the interior arrangement was very simple. The front door opened on a hall, which contained the staircase and ran all the way through on the right-hand side, while on the left was, first, our parlor, then the dining-room, and lastly, a small unused apartment not much larger than a closet. Upstairs were bedrooms, and in the rear was a detached kitchen. We allowed the little room on the first floor to stand vacant for several reasons. To begin with it was actually too small for actual service, and it was badly lighted by only one high, narrow window, besides some of the plastering had fallen from the ceiling, and I was afraid the rest might come tumbling down on our heads. That was undoubtedly a source of danger, and prevented us from using it for storage, so we simply left it as we found it—entirely empty. I suppose the room was constructed originally for a pantry. I have been a little particular in describing these details because, as you will see, they have a direct bearing on my story.

"We had been living in the house almost a year," continued the speaker, "when one Sunday in June, as nearly as I can remember, I went with my wife and child to see some friends near Audubon Park. My sister was visiting at Biloxi at the time, and we let the servant off for a holiday. We got back at 5 o'clock or thereabouts, for I recollect it was still quite light, and as we were walking toward the house I noticed that somebody had left a stepladder standing directly in front of the high window opening into the little disused room on the ground floor. 'That's rather a cordial invitation to prowlers,' I said half joking. 'Let's see whether any have availed themselves of it.' So when we went inside we walked back together to the last door and I pushed it open. 'Why! what does this mean?' I exclaimed in astonishment. There was nobody there but the room, which had always been entirely vacant, contained several pieces of furniture. A rough-looking table stood in one corner, with an old-fashioned straight-back chair in front of it and opposite was a small bed cot. There were some papers and other things on the table and a religious print stuck on one of the walls. I started to go in, but my wife held me back. 'Don't go in,' she pleaded, 'the plaster may fall. Those things must belong to the cook. It struck me very strange that the cook should move in without asking permission, but I noticed that my wife was very nervous so I drew the door to and we went into the parlor. A few minutes later I walked outside to shift the ladder, and as I picked it up I glanced through the window. The room was perfectly empty.

"I am not superstitious, and the proof of it is that I thought immediately I was the victim of some practical joke. I re-entered the house quietly from the rear and again I opened the door. The room was as empty as a drum, and it was evident at a glance that no sort of trickery was remotely possible. I won't attempt to describe my feelings. I was so shocked, so bewildered, so frightened to tell you the truth that for a moment or two I was simply rooted to the spot. Then I pulled myself together somehow and went back to the parlor. My wife saw at once that something was wrong.

"It's that room!" I blurted out. 'There's nothing in it now—not a stick!'

"And immediately I had a case of hysterics on my hands. That's about all there is to the story. Next morning I examined the place carefully by broad daylight, and it was plain from the dust on the floor that no furnishing of any kind had been there for years. We left the house before the end of the week, paying a month's forfeit on the lease, not because we believe in spooks, but because we didn't care to stay in a place where unaccountable things happen. It's bad for the nerves. My wife and I have talked the matter over a thousand times, carefully comparing notes, and as far as we know we both saw the same things. My boy must have seen them, too, for when we went back into the parlor he asked his mother 'whether that wasn't Aunt Hattie's chair.' Aunt Hattie is an old relative of ours, who has a favorite straight-back chair, similar to the one we saw in the room. Of course we have never allowed ourselves to refer to the occurrence before the child, so I am unable to say positively what else he observed. What I saw myself was as plain and as distinct as you are at this moment. I even noticed that one of the table legs had been mended with a piece of slat, and my wife remarked the same thing. The house is still standing, and has since been occupied by several successive tenants. As far as I am aware none of them have ever had any unusual experience."

BLACK EYES.

Treatment for the Kind That Are Not Given by Nature.

When the patient is seen early, before discoloration has set in, cold compresses or evaporating lotions are indicated; this reduces the swelling and limits the subsequent discoloration. But if the patient is seen after he has a fully-developed "black eye," hot compresses and massage are required. The affected portion is smeared over with vaseline and rubbed for 10 minutes several times a day. By frequent massage and continuous hot applications the discoloration may be almost entirely removed within twenty-four hours. The professional "black eye" artists use a poultice of the scrapings of a root, which is thought to be bryony root.

A single human hair will support four ounces without breaking.

FOUND IN THE PALM

SOME OF ITS TRUTHS AND HOW TO FIND THEM.

What the Lines, Dents, Curves and Mounds in the Hand Show—Marks That Portend Serious Results—How They May Be Averted.

There are all sorts of palmists, the same as of doctors, and the art is capable of just as much quackery. Too many "professional" palmists mix a little truth with a good deal of speculation, to please their patrons and get trade. For the ordinary person always does want to know a "little more," and the person who will give it to them is always a bit more attractive (for the time being). But palmistry is a real thing, there's no doubt about that, and the more it is studied and its conclusions verified, the more true and wonderful it proves itself to be.

And it is an art that any one can easily learn. Many a woman in our cities who hasn't the usual talents to help please a company, has been asked to "read hands" at church and other entertainments. I know one such woman who is in constant demand in her own city and neighboring places yet she has never advertised herself in any way and is very modest concerning the remarkable ability so many others have attributed to her. I must say that I was a skeptic myself until personal contact disclosed a woman who really did remarkable things,—who read the lines just as they were written, and yet was constantly astonished to learn that they had expressed the truth. No inducement can make her generalize or go "beyond the lines." Quite a successful New York clairvoyant and palmist said to her, after a short consultation, "Madam, you would never succeed in New York, you are too honest. There is no need to be quite so honest, and besides, if you said a little more, it would please better and not be much out of the way." But our palmist looks with awe on the wonderful lines, and with childlike simplicity feels that she is accountable to God for being as honest and accurate as possible; feels that the more she strives for her ideal, the closer she will be to God, and the more she will act and speak as he wishes her to do. Churches of every denomination, associations of clubs and the like, to say nothing of private individuals, from a New York millionaire and prominent business man down down to the humbler classes (as far as material prosperity goes) have all been her patrons.

The left hand lines show characteristics with which you were born. Those on the right hand are your individuality lines, and also show whether you have made better or worse inherited qualities. The hand lines will almost always vary more or less on every hand. The vital line or the line of life, is long and encircles the mount of Venus, which gives long life, free from illness; if the line of health crossed it prominently, it would mean probable death at the age indicated by the crossing. Age is counted on the line of life. Many little lines crossing the life line denote many illnesses or troubles. Other things are denoted when separate lines rise or fall from it. It is a sign of a very strong constitution to be without the health line, but few are. It should start from the bracelet or from the line of life and go on toward the mount of Mercury. If it joins the line of head, it shows tendency to brain attack from overwork or over excitement. A cross on the line shows an illness, the date of which must be looked for on the line of life. The longer the line of heart the more ideal the love. Branches rising and falling from the line of heart show the influence of other people on the affections, and as these branches are crossed or otherwise, so is the love successful and returned, or disappointed and unhappy. When a branch cuts through the heart line and descends beneath it, it is a sign of disappointment. No branches mean a loveless life, as far as the opposite sex is concerned. Dots and dents on the heart line always show troubles, physical or mental. A hand without any heart line shows hard-heartedness and cruelty. When the line of head is separated from the line of life, it means self confidence and rash impulsiveness. When the lines are joined as far as the middle, great timidity. When the head line is long and sloping, it means imagination, artistic feeling, poetry and but little judgment. If curved in excess, it will bring folly and delusion. If straight it means common sense, care and economy. If the line advances only to the middle, it means want of spirit and balance. The line of fate shows worldly success or failure and the general course of the life. If the fate line rises from the line of life it is good and common. If from the middle of the hand, a life of trouble, but of hope and energy. From the bracelet to the mount of Saturn, great success. Of course, there is a great deal more to say about these lines and many others not pictured and their influences over one another. Stars, squares, triangles and circles also have their meanings. The leaning of the fingers toward one another and their form also have very decided meanings in regard to character and characteristics.

One fact should be emphasized in connection with palmistry. The marks that portend serious results mean that those results will very probably take place unless the mode of life as hitherto been practiced is completely changed. And whether the lack of health is due to brain, heart or other organ is expressed by the lines. A correct reading of the hand-lines, therefore, need in no case cause depression, or hopelessness, but, on the contrary, an ambition to profit by the warnings expressed, and thus "cover up" the undesirable lines.—I. B. in Farm and Home.

SILK HAT CAUSED A RIOT.

It Was the First of Its Kind Seen on the Streets of London.

Jan. 15, 1797, was the date fixed by Mr. Hetherington for the first appearance in public with the new hat, the silk hat of to-day, says the Hatters' Gazette. He believed that in the natural course of events he would create a sensation, but he was not prepared for the commotion which followed. It was with no little trepidation that, about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, Mr. Hetherington emerged from his shop in the Strand. His family advised against it, but he was determined, and forth he sallied.

The Strand, as now, was one of the busy streets of London and Mr. Hetherington had not walked ten feet before merchants and others, attracted by the unusual sight, stopped and gazed in wonder. Mr. Hetherington, however, moved on, but men who had only stopped to look now followed after him and in less time than it takes to tell it the street was crowded was a bowling mob. Those on the outskirts of the crowd did not know the nature of the trouble, if there was any, but they helped to swell the din. How Mr. Hetherington fared, however, is best told by the journal's of that date, whose pages have been searched by the tailors' and cutters' special commissioner. One Gazette gave this account of the remarkable event:

"John Hetherington, haberdasher of the Strand, was arraigned before the lord mayor yesterday on a charge of breach of the peace and inciting a riot and was required to give bond in the sum of £500. It was in evidence that Mr. Hetherington, who is well connected, appeared upon the public highway wearing upon his head what he called a silk hat (which was offered in evidence), a tall structure having a shining luster and calculated to frighten timid people. As a matter of fact the officers of the crown stated that several women fainted at the unusual sight, while children screamed, dogs yelped and a young son of Cordwainer Thomas who was returning from a chandler's shop, was thrown down by the crowd which had collected and had his right arm broken. For these reasons the defendant was seized by the guards and taken before the lord mayor. In extenuation of his crime defendant claimed that he had not violated any law of the kingdom, but was merely exercising a right to appear in a headdress of his own design—a right not denied by any Englishman."

Another paper of the same date (Jan. 16, 1797) in commenting upon Mr. Hetherington's appearance said:

"In these days of enlightenment it must be considered an advance in dress reform, and one which is bound sooner or later to stamp its character upon the entire community. The new hat is destined to work a revolution in headgear, and we think the officers of the crown erred in placing the defendant under arrest."

Peculiarities in Eyesight.

A Chicago oculist, who has made a close study of the visual organs of his patients, has come to the conclusion that most people are right or left-sighted, as they are right or left handed. He now regards it as an established fact that we all use one eye—the right or left—in preference when looking through a glass or taking an aim with a gun. If we do not perceive this ourselves oculists and opticians remark it. The ignorance of most people on this subject is illustrated by their buying glasses at the optician's without taking account of any difference between the eyes. Thus only one of the eyes is helped, while the other one, being less called into exercise, becomes less and less useful and loses its power, as a tool rusts when not in use.

Yet both our eyes are needed to see well. It becomes, therefore, highly important to observe how the child uses its eyes in order to correct those attitudes which tend to injury of the sight as well as the health. Children in writing rarely fail to give the head an inclination by which the eyes are placed at unequal distances from the paper. They are also apt to incline their head too far and acquire the habit of bringing it too near, as when they try to accommodate themselves to a feeble sight. Not sufficient attention is given to these matters, especially when we consider the consequences of such habits in mature age.

A large proportion of our defects originate in want of proper care during childhood. We do wrong to such wonderful tools as our senses when we do not give them the education they need. It is not surprising that parents who are so particular about the way their children hold their spoon or fork pay so little attention to the way they use their eyes.

Fish That Sport Double Tails.

Two tails attached to a fish! Few people have ever seen such a freak of nature. Nearly every one has seen the pretty bushtail goldfish that have four or five, or sometimes more, long, wavy, filmy tails, but very few people know but that very few of them are born that way. When the little goldfish are very, very young their flesh is as clear as glass, so that one can see every bone in their tiny bodies. At this time the few that are born with two or more tails are put by themselves, and then a queer looking old Jap, with a great magnifying glass fastened in front of his eye, and wee sharp tools handy, reaches down under the water and cuts off the tails of the plain little fish, and then three or four of these tails are jointed on the back bone where the one was cut off and fastened there with tiny bandages until they grow fast.

The Japanese, who are very skillful in queer things of this kind, grow the finest goldfish in the world, and it is a very good business, for very fine fish of this kind often bring as much as $300 to $500, and one sold not long ago for $1,000.

Chinese are dangerous enemies, for they are treacherous. That's why the Counterfeits of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve are dangerous. They look like DeWitt's, but instead of the all-healing witch hazel they all contain ingredients liable to irritate the skin and cause blood poisoning. For piles, injures and skin diseases use the original and genuine DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. W. A. Schreiter.

LA CROSSE, Sept. 1.—A deep mystery surrounds the finding of three skeletons at Bell Center, a small town in the Kickapoo valley. They were found while tearing down a house which is about 40 years old. No one seems to be able to give any light on the mystery, but the prevailing opinion is that the skeletons are those of three persons who were murdered a long time ago, old residents having slight remembrance of the affair. The bones are well preserved and an investigation by the authorities will follow.

CAUGHT WITH A CAMERA.

Conductors and Brakemen Fired for "Holding Out."

FARGO, N. D., Sept. 4.—Two conductors and sixteen brakemen on the Dakota division of the Northern Pacific have been discharged for accepting cash fares from hoboes for riding on trains. The evidence was secured by a spotter, who impersonated a hobo and was equipped with a button camera. He took snap shots just as he handed over the money to the railroad men. When brought up before Superintendent Wilson they all denied the charges, but caved in when confronted with the photographs.

EXPRESS OFFICE ROBBED.

Masked Men at Larimore, N. D., Force the Agent to Open the Safe.

LARIMORE, N. D., Sept. 1.—A daring robbery occurred here about 3 a. m., just before the flyer pulled in from the west. Two masked men entered the Great Northern express office and held up Agent Harry Nelson. They took a shot at him and, by the light of matches and at the point of a gun, compelled him to open the safe. They secured about $95, after which they disappeared; presumably getting on the morning train.

Big Brewery Combine at La Crosse.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Sept. 3.—A scheme will materialize in a few days to combine all but the largest of the local breweries into one big company of $1,000,000 capital and erect a new modern brewery, closing all others owned by the companies involved. The John Gund Brewing company, which recently built a fine plant, will not enter the combination. The papers are now being drawn up by attorneys to complete the deal.

Jenkins Must Hang.

BISMARCK, Sept. 4.—Governor Fancher denied the application to life imprisonment of the death sentence passed upon Ira C. Jenkins, who was convicted of the murder of Gus Stark, a companion, and he will be hanged Sept. 14. His father was at first suspected of the crime, was arrested and made a confession, stating that his son committed the murder, and that the two had agreed to cover up the crime.

Heavy Cattle Shipment.

KIMBALL, S. D., Aug. 31.—What is probably the largest single shipment of cattle which will be made from the South Dakota ranges by any two men this year was made Monday from Chamberlain by O. K. Howard, the cattle king of South Dakota, and Corbin Morris, another ranchman. This shipment comprised 130 cars.

Wisconsin Social Democracy.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 4.—One hundred and forty-three delegates from Milwaukee, Racine, Sheboygan Falls and Kiel attended the state convention of the Social Democracy here. State and congressional tickets were named. Howard Tuttle of Milwaukee was nominated for congress.

Points to a Murder.

BARABOO, Wis., Sept. 3.—The body of Adam Rote, boss bridge carpenter on the Northwestern, was found in the mill race here. Foul play is suspected, as what appear to be two bullet holes were found in the man's head. A coroner's inquest is being held.

Tests Prove Successful.

FARGO, N. D., Aug. 31.—The tests of the lignite coal found along the line of the new Washburn road, north of Bismarck, are proving a decided success. Lignite can be laid down here at $2.65 per ton.

From Clairvoyant to Countess and Now Benefactress

LADY COOK'S GOOD ACTS

Tennie C. Claflin Now the Wife of a Rich and Aged Englishman, to Spend Some Money for Her Sex in America—A Remarkable Career.

Lady Cook, formerly Tennie C. Claflin, established in London the Alexandra Home for girl artists at a cost of $1,250,000. She has $2,000,000 to found a similar instiution in New York. Her husband is extremely rich, and she spends a great deal of money in the interests of her sex. She supports seven schools in Portugal and educates the brightest graduates in London. She began life as a child clairvoyant and became a "lady broker," journalist and apostle of free love.

This generation knows only Lady Cook, the demure, benevolent, silver-haired chatelaine of the beautiful estate of Montserrat, in Portugal, the wife of Sir Francis Cook, one of the richest of Englishmen and a Portuguese viscount.

(Lady Cook.)

She will establish in New York a replica of her London institution, the Alexandra Home for young women artists. It cost $1,250,000, and has accommodations for 160 inmates, each of whom is furnished with a bedroom, while every two share a parlor.

Sir Francis Cook is nearly ninety years old.

He has a standing offer of $5,000 to whoever will trace to their source certain scandalous stories about his wife that have been circulated for thirty years past.

Lady Cook and her sister, Victoria Woodhull Martin, once threatened to sue the Inspector of the New York Police, because he had been quoted as designating them "charming adventuresses."

That they were charming, no gallant of the vanished generation would have disputed. Certainly not Jay Gould, Jim Fiske and other olden kings of finance, who were credited with having enabled the "lady brokers," Woodhull & Claflin, to clear large sums of money in Wall street.

Certainly not Theodore Tilton, who wrote Victoria Woodhull's biography when she was nominated for the presidency, and whose name was frequently coupled with hers in the course of the famous Beecher-Tilton divorce scandal.

Tennessee Claflin—in after years she called herself "Tennie C."—was the youngest of the ten daughters of Buckman Claflin, a Massachusetts lawyer.

It was in 1869 that she and her sister Tennie formed the brokerage partnership that laid the foundation of all their subsequent notoriety. Encouraged and sustained by Vanderbilt, Gould and the other great powers of "the Street," the sisters installed themselves in an office in Broad street.

Never were brokers so besieged as they. The newspapers interviewed them, the weeklies satirized them, the comics caricatured them.

They started Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly, and Col. Blood became the editor. Then trouble began. They were driven out of Wall street. Men cried "Blackmail!" Women passed by on the other side of the way.

Then came the Beecher-Tilton affair. Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly was the first publication that dared to tell the news of the great preacher's difficulties, and the edition went like wildfire. From the outset the Weekly took the side of Tilton, whom it exploited as a bitterly wronged husband.

Enemies lurked at every turn. Libel suits sprung up in all directions. They were arrested again and again, as fast as they could procure bail bonds. Released on bail, the sisters essayed to restore their fortunes by a lecturing tour. More indictments and warrants followed. In many communities they were not allowed to speak in public.

They fled from the country, ruined in purse and broken in spirit. A kinder fortune awaited them abroad. Victoria became the wife of John Biddulph Martin, a rich London banker, and is now a widow. Tennie married Sir Francis Cook, a retired manufacturer. They became partners a year ago in a brokerage business in London, under the name Lady Cook & Co., with the sanction and help of Sir Francis.

Through all her trials Lady Cook's love of her native land has never wavered. It is that which is bringing her back. Lady Cook is clear-headed, full of business sagacity. Her charitable works for the peasants on her husband's estates are well known. It is eleven years since she began her educational work in Cintra. From her own private purse Lady Cook supports seven schools.

As many as twelve little girls she has sent to the Catholic convents in London. The Queen of Portugal, who is a devout Roman Catholic, neglects no opportunity to honor Lady Cook. The castle at Montserrat is 150 feet long and 75 feet wide.

Alexandra House in New York will probably cost in the neighborhood of a million and a half, and it will be deeded to a board of trustees. The London house, which is twelve years old, accommodates 150 young women students.

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

A GOLDEN ◆ DAWN.

CHAPTER I.

When Francis Vane went to live at Dunwold, it seemed to him that his life was nearly over; he had sought the shade of a real "Valley of Poppies." His fate was a singular one. He had escaped being a genius. He did everything well, but nothing more than well; he was proficient in many things, but excelled in nothing; he had a taste for drawing, music, literature, sculpture—in all of which he was not unskilled, but he excelled in none. He was the only son of his mother, who was a widow; she had a life annuity which died with her, and she had saved a small sum of money for him. He was so brilliant and clever as a child that she was convinced he would be a genius. She endeavored in every possible way to save, in order that she might give him a good education. She sent him to Rugby and to Oxford, hoping that he would distinguish himself in the church. He was considered clever and talented by the students and professors, but he failed in all the examinations; his knowledge was too scattered—it was not concentrated enough. After that, he would not study for the bar, he determined to live by literature. Mrs. Vane had implicit faith in him until the last. She believed that if he became a writer he would be one of the lights of the world. She died before he left Oxford, leaving him the result of the savings of her whole life—an income of a hundred and fifty per annum. He was young then in years, but old in disappointment. Without quite knowing why, he felt that his life was in some measure over; he had failed, and he could hardly tell how he had failed; he could not understand where his life had slipped from his grasp. He settled down in a pretty little cottage orne at Dunwold, with his books and pictures, and the numerous works of art that he had gathered about him. He resolved to devote himself to literature; he mapped out for himself a life that was to be quiet and retired; he determined to live for his books, and care for nothing else. He went out one summer evening, and returned with a love in his heart which was his doom.

He had gone, during the silent calm of the summer evening, down to the little church where the great lime-trees grew, and, standing underneath them, he heard a strain of music so clear and sweet that his whole heart was melted, and his soul was moved to listen. He could have fancied that angel hands were touching the keys, making soft, dreamy, beautiful music, such as one could imagine floating from the clouds.

It took possession of him. He stood under the lime-trees while the sun was setting, the birds were chirping, and the exquisite harmony was floating through the air. Presently it ceased, and in its place a sweet brooding silence fell over the earth. It was the gloaming then. He had stood there listening longer than he knew. From the old stone porch there passed into the gray evening light the tall, slight figure of a young girl, with a fair, pale face like none other he had ever seen. It was not beautiful, not pretty; but there was something of the light of heaven on it.

She walked through the church-yard, and down the green lane that led to Dunwold. Then he recovered from his trance, and seemed to understand that the young girl was the new organist, of whom he had heard the rector speak as of a girl all soul, and that soul all music.

He went home with a dreamy, poetical face engraved on his heart, with a love that was his doom.

He found means, some few days afterward, to make her acquaintance. Scholar and student as he was, he loved music; and the happiest evenings of his clouded life were those he spent in the old church, or under the lime-trees, listening to the music which seemed to ripple from those white soft fingers. He found that she was the child of an English father and an Alsatian mother. From her father she had inherited an English face and simple, honest English mind; from her mother, a soul filled with music and dreams. She was an orphan, and gained her livelihood by her musical talents. She had answered the rector's advertisement for an organist, and had resided for some months in Dunwold.

She was a genius. The rector saw that at once, and was only too pleased to engage her to instruct his children; so that, with her different occupations, Elsie Redfern lived in comfort, and found her life very pleasant.

Francis Vane asked her to marry him, and she consented. Their love-story was an idyl; they lived in the midst of sunshine and music. Elsie was shy of speech. Sometimes, when he asked her to tell him how much she loved him, she would answer:

"I cannot tell you in words, but I will in music."

And then her love would find expression in music that was inspired. It was a love so pure, so calm, so refined, that it seemed to have nothing of earth in it.

They were married, and went to the quiet, pretty cottage Francis Vane called home. He made his house a wonder of artistic beauty, with its choice books, rare pictures, pretty statuettes; it was an artistic home. He took especial pride in his garden—an old-fashioned, sweet-smelling, place, such as poets might haunt—and the choicest part of it was the beautiful bed of white hyacinths which became poor Elsie's pride.

For four years they lived together, a life such as is rarely granted to mortals, a life that was all poetry. The student spent it with his books, the wife with her music—marriage for once no fiction—two hearts, two souls, made one.

But the day came when the white hyacinths drooped for want of care, and the notes of the grand old organ were still. Never more were the white hands to linger over the keys; never more was the gentle face to shine with the beauty of the soul within. Elsie Vane lay dying, with the baby she had longed for in her arms.

It was not like dying; her heart seemed to have always been half in heaven. She had expressed her feelings more by music than by words; there had always been something unearthly and spiritual about her; and now, as she lay dying, there was a light on her face which made those who saw it wonder. Her mind wandered at times during those last hours; and her husband noticed how often she spoke of her favorite flowers, the white hyacinths. When she died, he took some of them from the garden, and planted them on her grave.

He said very little of his sorrow; he spoke only of his loss; but the best part of him died with her—he half-buried himself in her grave. He made no promise; but he knew that no one would ever take her place in his heart and home. His life appeared like something to be borne, because there was the hope of meeting her at the end of it.

Long years before Francis Vane went to live at the pretty cottage outside Dunwold, it had received the name of Sweetbriers, from the simple fact that the whole garden was surrounded by a splendid hedge of sweetbrier, and the air for a great distance around was perfumed by it. Francis Vane made up his mind to spend the remainder of his life at the cottage. From the window of his study he could see one of the lime trees, under the shade of which his wife slept her last long sleep. He devoted himself to his books and, when his child grew older, to her. With his wife, he had lost the half of his income; but, with the aid of his pen, he had sufficient to live upon, with great care and economy, though nothing to spare or waste. He kept one maid servant, and gave up visiting, as well as receiving visitors.

Until Hyacinth was eleven years old, he taught her himself, and it was a most peculiar education. Had she been a boy, it might have fitted her for the world; as it was, it simply made her unpractical in every way.

He was a visionary himself; he had superb theories and beautiful dreams, but he had not the least knowledge of human nature. He believed in the power of love, the constancy of men, the honor of women, the earnestness of life in general; he had no knowledge of the light loves, the fleeting friendships, the want of care, thought, or interest that distinguish the children of this generation—he was a wise, simple, kindly scholar, who feared heaven, honored the sovereign, and believed in the power of knowledge. Admirable, estimable, worthy of all respect and esteem, he was nevertheless not the teacher to train an imaginative, impressionable child.

For some years he made no difference in his mode of life; the child was tended by the faithful servant who had watched her mother die—Miriam Claye. And to Miriam the girl was dearer than the light of her eyes. She had a large old-fashioned room to play in. She had a household of dolls, a library of children's books, a number of toys, and she lived in dreamland.

Francis Vane began to teach his daughter Latin when she was old enough to learn it. He provided her with the best authors, with old-world poets. It was a curious education; but it was the only one that he knew how to give her.

His love for her was as dreamy as his life; he was seldom alive to any practical needs. He never gave a thought to dress or anything of that kind. He ordered books, music, drawings; he would talk to her at times for an hour with calm, mild wisdom. He loved her with a great love—but he was most unfitted to train a child.

He seemed to wake up from a dream when Hyacinth was sixteen; his child was gone, and in her place stood a tall, beautiful girl, who looked at him with her mother's eyes, and seemed to ask what was her position in this world, and what she had to do.

Francis Vane thought long and solemnly about what he was to do with his beautiful daughter.

Sixteen, beautiful as a poet's dream, accomplished, better educated than half the girls in England, graceful, and imaginative, with a face like a flower, life was full of fairest, sweetest promise to Hyacinth Vane. It was an unread book, every page of which seemed to her full of poetry and unknown delight. Her world was a very small one; it consisted of the little household at Sweetbriers. She had no companions, no play fellows. Francis Vane would not let her play with village children, and she had no opportunity of knowing any other.

She was healthy and strong. She loved the fresh air, the early morning breeze; she had the natural high spirits and vivacity of a young girl; she was charming in every respect.

The rector's wife, Mrs. Morley, meeting her one day, was struck with her wonderful beauty. She stopped to speak to her, and invited her to the vicarage.

Up till that time Hyacinth had held no well-defined position in society. She had always been considered far above the people in the village. However small her father's income was, still he was a gentleman of independent means. But the county people had not recognized him. He cared nothing himself for visitors or visiting. This invitation from Mrs. Morley, however, opened his eyes to the fact that he must think for his daughter as he had not thought for himself.

Hyacinth was almost dazed with delight. To visit the vicarage, with its charming mistress, the lovely children, the well-selected guests always to be found there, was a prospect so full of unbounded delight that she could hardly hope it might be realized.

CHAPTER II.

Hyacinth Vane presented herself before the surprised eyes of her father, one June afternoon, looking so beautiful in her festive attire that he was betrayed into an imprudent speech.

"Why, Hyacinth, my dear," he cried. "You are a beautiful woman!"

For hours afterward the sound of her happy laughter rang in his ears.

"A woman, papa?" she answered. "No, I am only a child."

He looked distressed and perplexed. "How old are you?" he asked; and she answered:

"I am sixteen, papa."

"Sixteen!" he said, musingly. "Why, it seems to me but yesterday that I saw you lying in your mother's arms. Sixteen! Can sixteen years have passed away?"

Philosopher, scholar, and student as he was, he did not recognize the fact that long years had passed while he had buried himself in his books and had watched the lime blossoms appear and fade. He looked thoughtfully at his daughter.

"I must begin to think more about you," he said. "I have not realized the flight of time."

Hyacinth laughed. The years that had passed like a dream to her father had seemed very long and uneventful to her.

She went to Vicarage, and Mrs. Morley was charmed with her; her beauty, her grace, her quaint earnestness, her brilliant imagination, made her one of the most charming companions.

When she had gone that night, Mrs. Morley went to her husband, the good doctor, whose life was governed by the doctrines he preached.

"John," she said, "you will tell me in this case virtue is its own reward. I want to do a good-natured action."

"I need not say that I am willing to help; good nature delights me," answered the vicar.

"I want to introduce Hyacinth Vane into a little good society," said Mrs. Morley. "I have seen no one half so charming for years. She must be most lonely, for her father spends the whole of his time with his books. He is no companion for her, and she really ought to have one."

"It is a lonely life," admitted the vicar. "What do you intend to do?"

"Merely introduce her; she will make her own way. If Lady Rosedene saw her she would invite her to Dene Hall. She told me last week that she deplored the absence of pretty girls more than anything else. She would take her by the hand, I am sure; and I shall not be surprised, with her face, if she marries well, and becomes one of the queens of the county."

"You are sanguine?" laughed the vicar.

"The child has no mother, and it would be a kindly action to take her by the hand," said Mrs. Morley. "If you are willing, we will get up a picnic to Dunwold Woods, and beautiful Hyacinth Vane shall be its chief attraction. I will ask Lady Rosedene, and you will see that my words will come true."

The vicar gave his consent, and the picnic was soon organized. Hyacinth smiled in incredulous wonder when the invitation was put into her hands.

"I am really grown up, she said, to herself, with a happy smile. "Who would ever have thought that I should go to a picnic? Papa," she cried, breaking in upon the quietness of that much-loved study, "read this note, and then realize if you can, how grown up I am. I shall want a pretty dress, a hat, gloves—so many things. Do you think that you can afford to let me go?"

"I will see," he answered, with a smile; "we must consult, Miriam."

The result of his "seeing" was that Hyacinth, in a pretty white and blue costume, looked more lovely than ever, and went, with a smile on her face, to meet her doom—went in the full beauty of a June day, with a face fair as a flower, a heart light as that of a bird, her eyes full of happiness, her golden hair like an aureole round her head. Francis Vane watched her with loving gaze, and to him, in that moment of unconcealed pride and delight in his child, there came no shadow of a prison cell.

Mrs. Morley always spoke of that picnic as one of the successes of her life; no party of guests could have enjoyed themselves more. Lady Rosedene, just as the vicar's good wife had foreseen, was delighted with the beautiful debutante.

"Is her father a gentleman?" she whispered to Mrs. Morley. "She herself is charming. But is she quite presentable?"

Mrs. Morley, in her good nature, gave such a flattering account of the scholar that Lady Rosedene became desirous to see him.

"Shall I invite the father as well?" she asked, and was just a little offended when Mrs. Morley assured her that it would not be of the least use.

"You have evidently never heard the romantic story of Francis Vane's courtship and marriage," said Mrs. Morley. "He is about the only case I know in this world of really true love. It is no fiction to say that his heart is buried in his wife's grave. All his neighbors have been kind to him, and invited him, but it was found that invitations merely troubled him; now every one leaves him in peace."

"Then you think he would not come, even if I invited him?" said Lady Rosedene. "I generally manage to have my own way with the men."

"I do not think you would succeed in this case," answered Mrs. Morley; "nor do I think it would be kind to desire it. When so much of a man's heart and soul is in heaven, it seems almost a pity to bring him back into close contact with the world again."

Lady Rosedene's eyes were fixed on the fair, bright face of the young girl. She turned suddenly to the vicar's wife.

"I have read," she said, "of the sweetness of flowers being wasted on the desert air—of violets blooming unseen, and giving their fragrance to the wind. I do not believe in anything of the kind. Take the great kingdom of flowers; ever here and there is one of such exquisite beauty that every one pauses to admire it. It appears to me that one in the world of fair women, every now and then we find a face so beautiful that the whole world ought to see and admire it. I shall be doing an act of charity in making this face known."

But the vicar's wife shook her head. Such a doctrine was not quite in accordance with her husband's teaching.

"I do not know about that," she said. "Every face is what I may call the veil or cover of an immortal soul; and I should say any soul was endangered where the owner of it was worshiped for her beauty. I do not quite think myself that beauty should be so eagerly admired."

"It is the way of the world," laughed Lady Rosedene. "We plain women may thank Heaven that great beauty and great gifts do not often come together. If they did we should have but a poor chance. As it is, some people do value common sense and intellect more than beauty. I shall make friends with Miss Vane. We shall hear something of her before many months are over, mark my words."

And those same words indeed came true.

Chapter III.

Lady Rosedene, of Dene Hall, was one of the celebrities of the county in which Dene stood. She was left a widow at quite an early age, mistress of a magnificent estate, and a vast fortune. Being both young and clever, every one expected that she would marry again; but Lady Rosedene was wiser than that. The late lord had been of a most tyrannical disposition and unmistakable temper. His young wife suffered terribly from it, being herself of a gay, frank, happy nature. When Lord Rosedene died, she said to herself that she would never again bend her neck under the yoke that was so weighty to bear. She resolved to enjoy her life; and, as a preliminary, as the most certain means of insuring that enjoyment, she resolved upon never having anything to do with love.

"If I am to enjoy my life, to preserve my good looks, I must have nothing to do with the fret and the fever called love."

Having made that resolution, she began to enjoy life in her own way, and succeeded perfectly in her plan. One of the most charming and captivating of women, she had numerous admirers. She enjoyed the friendship of clever and sensible men; she enjoyed their admiration; she was pleased with her conquests—but she steadfastly refused to have anything to do with love, even in its milder form of flirtation.

For fifteen years she had been the "queen of the county." The fetes and festivities at Dene Hall were famous all over the neighborhood—no one else gave such parties, such balls, such picnics—no one gave such pleasant garden parties. The young girls of the neighborhood adored her.

She would not hear of love for herself; but nothing gave her greater happiness than to see it in others. She took the keenest interest in a love affair. She was not a match maker; no one could have ever used such a word about the refined and clever Lady Rosedene; but she liked to bring young people together. She had a wonderful kind of instinct which told her at once what persons would agree together. She never had an ill assorted party of guests. She never had the least drawback to the success of any entertainment she gave.

She was famous for having promoted more marriages than any one else in the county. Mothers who had a difficulty in marrying their daughters found their difficulties ended when they once applied to Lady Rosedene. She would invite a young girl to Dene Hall, introduce her amongst an eligible set, and then leave her to take her chance. That usually ended in marriage. So successful had she been that pretty young girls were now at a premium in the neighborhood of Dunwold; they were all married and gone from home; so that the kindly, happy widow was somewhat a loss for young recruits.

She began to fancy that at one or two of her balls there had been a dearth of pretty faces, that her charade party had lacked interest, and that there was a want of novelty in some of the scenes. She was more than delighted when Mrs. Morley introduced her to Hyacinth Vane; here, indeed, was a novelty—a girl more beautiful than any she had ever seen; with a voice that was like sweetest music, and a smile that was like sunshine; a girl whose every movement was full of sweetest harmony, as though she were following a strain of hidden music.

Lady Rosedene fell in love with her at once.

"Your father is a scholar and a gentleman; they tell me he lives amid his books, and counts this outer world as nothing. To invite him to Dene Hall would be an empty compliment—he would not come; but I wish he would let you visit me. Do you think he would?" said Lady Rosedene to her.

Hyacinth raised her happy eyes to the kindly, comely face.

"I think he would be delighted," she answered. "My father is not quite like other men; he does not seem to live in the same world—I doubt whether he would understand at all the kind of world in which you move."

"Probably not," said Lady Rosedene, delighted with the girl's earnestness and beauty; "but you will understand it."

She smiled at the fervor with which the girl clasped her little white hands and replied:

"I should love it, I think, more than any other world."

A dainty flush covered her fair face, her eyes shone with the brightness of stars.

"Then," said Lady Rosedene, "you shall see what it is like. Come and stay with me for a month if you can be spared for so long. I have no wish to flatter you, but with a face like yours, the world ought to be at your feet."

Hyacinth Vane never forgot that day. She had been accustomed to hear Lady Rosedene's name mentioned always as that of one of the powers of the land; and now to find that great and mighty personage not only kind to her, but absolutely asking for her society and her friendship, was something wonderful. She did not know that Lady Rosedene was driven almost to her wits' end for pretty faces, and that she would soon consider her prestige gone, unless she could introduce some new beauty. Hyacinth knew nothing of this, and wondered why the clever, dainty, exclusive lady should be so anxious for her friendship. She was delighted; her charming face seemed to grow more beautiful, her eyes brighter, her smile sweeter.

The day of the picnic was never to be forgotten by her; all the details of it she remembered; and in the dullest hours of her life those details came back to her with a torture all their own.

When Lady Rosedene took her home that evening she said:

"I shall take you at your word, Miss Vane, and drive over to-morrow to ask your papa if he can spare you for a month. You will enjoy yourself at Dene Hall, I am sure."

"I know that I shall," replied Hyacinth, simply.

Lady Rosedene was perfectly happy. She would be able to introduce a beauty such as no one had seen in that part of the country, and she should recover the prestige she had almost lost from a scarcity of beautiful faces.

When she reached home, Hyacinth

THE SCHOOLS.

THE SCHOOL YEAR OPENED ON TUESDAY, WITH A GOOD ATTENDANCE.

A TOTAL ENROLLMENT OF 560 PUPILS---THIRTEEN INSTRUCTORS.

School opened Tuesday with a very fair attendance, there being 346 grade pupils on the South Side. 170 on the North Side, and 44 High School pupils, or a total enrollment of 560 pupils, which is very good for the first day.

The corps of teachers on the North side consists of Mrs. Doe, 1st primary: Miss Costello, 2nd primary, Miss Swenson, 4th grade and part of 5th; and Miss Hickey, with the remainder of the 5th and the sixth grades. Miss Costello has been made acting principal of the North Side building. On the South Side, Miss Van Etten has the 1st grade: Miss Fahy, the 2d grade: Miss Renquist the 3rd and part of the 4th: Miss Curley the remainder of the 4th and the 5th, Miss Benedict the 6th and part of the 7th, and Miss Gibson the remainder of the 7th and the eighth. In the High School department, Miss Brown, the Principal, takes the work in History and English, with one Latin class: Miss Lusby, the rest of the Latin, and mathematics, and Mr. Whiteley the Sciences.

It is especially urged that all pupils who are intending to take work in either the High School or the grades enter at once. The work will be pushed vigorously from the start and no pupil can hope to retain his grade who enters much late.

It is the aim of the High School teachers to develop a strong school spirit, and encourage loyalty and enthusiasm on the part of the student body, and to this end class organizations, a literary society, and an athletic association are projected.

It is strongly desired that more boys enter the High School and stay in to graduation. At present, not over 15 per cent of the H. S. enrollment is boys. This ought to be changed, and every encouragement will be given by the Superintendent and H. S. teachers to get into the school every boy who can be made to realize the immense advantage of a High School education. In these days of High Schools and large bodies of graduates, a young man without such an education is quite apt to be at a disadvantage in the struggle for position and business preferment. The boy who is ambitious and wants to make the most of himself in mature life, will not neglect his opportunities while young.

In this connection attention is called to the new course of study which has been introduced into the High School, entitled the Civic Course. It is in all respects the same as the Latin Course, except that the pupils do not take Latin, but in place thereof take the following subjects: 1st year, Senior or Commercial Geography, and Senior English Grammar: 2d year, Physiology: 3rd year, Commercial Arithmetic: 4th year, Book-keeping. This is undoubtedly a good course for pupils who expect to enter upon business pursuits immediately on graduating from the High School. The diploma from the Civic Course, however, ranks the same as that from the Latin course, and will admit to the Civic or Scientific courses in the State University or other colleges.

In India, the land of famine, thousands die because they can not obtain food. In America, the land of plenty many suffer and die because they cannot digest the food they eat. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests what you eat. It instantly relieves and radically cures all stomach troubles. W. A. Schreiter.

WATTS DECIDES.

MAKES A RULING IN THE CASE OF POLK VS. RED LAKE COUNTY.

POLK COUNTY MUST PAY RED LAKE FOR HER SHARE IN BUILDINGS.

Judge Watts Monday decided the case brought by the commissioners of Polk county against those of Red Lake county to compel payment of Red Lake county's share of the bonded indebtedness that existed at the time of the creation of Red Lake county.

The action came up in the form of an application for a writ of mandamus requiring the commissioners of Red Lake county to immediately make provision for payment of Red Lake county's proportion of the bonded indebtedness and interest by levy and taxation upon property in that county.

The application is denied and it is ordered in judgment that Polk county must pay the debts that fall due as a result of the creation of the new county. This is in amount of $32,000, being the appraised value of the county buildings, at the time the separation took place.

It is further ordered that the balance of the debt, consisting of its bonded obligations, is to be paid by both Polk and Red Lake Counties directly to the holders of such evidence of indebtedness in proportion of the assessed values of the old and new counties to each other at the time of the creation of the new county, that Polk county not yet having paid to Red Lake county the appraised value of the buildings, until it does so has not claim against Red Lake county for any proportion of its indebtedness, nor can it require the officers of Red Lake county to levy any tax to pay such indebtedness.

County Attorney Holston, assisted by special county attorney Martin O'Brien applied for the writ and conducted the case for Polk county, Chas. E. Boughton and Van R. Brown being in charge of Red Lake county's interests.

The case will be immediately appealed to the supreme court, and owing to its importance will likely be preferred, and an early decision rendered.

ATTENTION FARMERS.

A Mass Meeting to be Held Saturday, Sept. 15, 1900, at 2 o'clock P. M., at the Court House in Red Lake Falls, Minn.

The audience will be addressed on the wheat situation.

Object.—To make 75 cents the minimum or lowest price for good marketable wheat.

Farmers, be sure to turn out and come to this meeting, as it is called for your benefit especially, and is bound to interest you intensely.

Listen to the idea of the promoter. As it will deal with facts which are bound to entail your prosperity.

Farmers, it will cost you a trifle, only one cent per bushel of your wheat or 10 cents per acre of your wheat acreage, to keep up the organization, which will give you an extra twenty-five cents per bushel for your wheat, and very probably more and besides a great deal of information worthy of your intelligent consideration.

Farmers, you can't afford to go unorganized any longer unless you are willing to obey the dictations of the wheat "Clique," who are setting the price of your product, to suit themselves.

It is out of reason!

The farmer, the producer, has the unquestionable right to set the minimum, or lowest price on his product. Which price shall never be less than the cost of producing the same. Farmers, as a class, are enslaved; their product, wheat especially, the price of which is controlled by, comparatively, a few moneyed men, who are reaping millions of dollars every year from this source.

Farmers—there is a way out of this dilemma.

Farmers—there is a Moses.

Farmers—there is a leader.

Farmers—will you follow him?

Then be sure to come to this meeting and listen to the address entitled, "The Wheat Situation of the Day."

Yours Respectfully,
P. E. Pirath,

RESOLUTIONS.

We, the Republicans of Red Lake county, in convention assembled, do hereby pledge our undivided support to Wm. McKinley and Theo. Roosevelt, also to the state, congressional, legislative and county ticket, and further instruct our legislative nominee to vote for the Hon. Knute Nelson for United States Senator.

We also heartily indorse the national and state platform of the Republican party, and urge all Republicans to work faithfully for the success of the Republican ticket.

We point with pride to the achievements of the administration of President McKinley; and the entire history of the Republican party.

W. A. Case.

After the chairman had appointed a committee on credentials, and another on resolutions an adjournment was taken. The Great Northern was late, detaining the Thief River Falls delegation, and it was the sentiment of the convention to await their coming before proceeding.

Hon. S. R. Van Sant, Republican nominee for Governor, who had driven over from Crookston, was present, and after the convention had reconvened, and the organization had been perfected by making the temporary organization permanent, he was introduced and spoke briefly, appealing to the Republicans for united party action, and declaring that the party today stood before the country with every pledge redeemed, and backed by such prosperity as had never been excelled. He was well received, and at the conclusion of his address was given three rousing cheers. He then took his departure, driving back to Crookston. Mr. Van Sant is an old lumberman, and while here took the opportunity afforded by the log drive to display his skill as a driver. His easy pose on the logs, and the dexterity with which he handled the pevee, was a an eye opener to the drivers present.

Before adjournment, a legislative committee was named, as follows:

Dr. N. M. Watson, C. G. Rapp, Ira C. Richardson, Ovide Moreau.

A county committee of seven was decided upon, and the following gentlemen were selected: Dr. N. M. Watson, chairman; John W. Eastman, secretary; Ovide Moreau, P. E. Smidesang, Wm. C. L. Demann, C. L. Dobner, C. G. Rapp.

There were contests over three offices. For Supt. of Schools, there were three candidates.

The first ballot resulted J. B. O'Brien, 15, Frank Brouillette, 14, M. E. Todd, 7.

Second ballot, O'Brien, 14, Brouillett, 18, Todd, 4.

Third ballot, O'Brien, 17, Brouillett, 16, Todd, 3.

Fourth ballot, O'Brien, 16, Brouillette, 17, Todd, 3.

At this juncture Mr. Todd arose, thanked the delegates who had voted for him, said he had had all the fun he wanted out of it, and withdrew his name.

The fifth ballot was then taken, and resulted O'Brien, 18, Brouillet, 16. Two of Brouillett's men voted judge of probate ballots by mistake, else it would have been a tie, and the delegates might still be voting.

The contest on sheriff gave Sampson the plum on the first ballot; his opponent was Carl Johnson, of St. Hilaire. The vote stood 25 to 12.

For judge of probate, Anatole Bachand received 33, John Deforge, 4.

Following is a list of delegates in attendance:

Selects Defeated.

The second and third games of the series of three, between Crookston and Red Lake Falls, were played at Crookston Friday and Saturday, resulting in defeat for the Selects.

The score in the first game stood 23 to 3; the second game resulted in a score of 15 to 14.

High School Base Ball Nine.

A High School base ball nine was organized Monday, taking in most of the players of the "J. B." nine, but one of the requirements is that the members be pupils of the High School. Following is the list of members:

Wm. Hunt, Anton Schusser, Norman Schreiter, Charley Brady, Dan Johnson, Verne Healy, Fred Richard, Eddie Paul, Hugo Zalser and Tom McNerthney.

Republican Legislative Convention.

The republican legislative convention met in Red Lake Falls Tuesday evening for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate for the 61st district, comprising Red Lake and Beltrami counties. As was anticipated there was a dead lock, each county having four votes to its credit, and every ballot until three o'clock the next morning showed a tie.

The candidates were, C. G. Rapp, of St. Hilaire, Sheriff Nygaard, and C. L. Smith of Bemidji. The tie was maintained by the Red Lake county delegation solidly supporting Rapp, while the Beltrami votes went alternately to Nygaard and to Smith.

Finally, at 3 A. M., Smith, with a burst of magnanimity, moved to make Rapp's nomination unanimous, and the deed was done.

The Gazette interviewed several of the leading Republicans yesterday. They are unanimous in the assertion that Rapp will receive the straight Republican support in this city, averring that Myron, in the Senate, will look out for our interests, while Rapp has pledged himself to deal fairly by Red Lake Falls.

Gentilly Wins.

For the second time in its history the Gentilly Dairy Association has made all the best cheese makers in the older portions of the state take places along down the columns, at the head of which, outranking them all in excellence, stands the award of the judges in its favor.

The reports from the state fair show that the Gentilly Dairy Association was awarded the first prize for its product, scoring 96 1-2 points out of a possible one hundred.

The result is a matter for pride with every resident of Polk county and the valley. It demonstrates that here in a new country, where the dairy interests have just begun to be developed, and where we yet lack the experience that comes with years, the natural conditions are the most favorable in the world for the production of butter and cheese, and proves that this is an industry that can be profitably followed.

Much credit is due in connection with this award, to the skill and good management of Mr. W. H. Verity, the expert cheese maker of the Gentilly association, who has made this result possible, as well as the managers of the company, and to the careful, painstaking patrons of the cheese factory, who have been taught the necessity of the strictest cleanliness in handling their milk.—Crookston Times.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 7.—The 1,140 delegates to the Democratic state convention were in their seats when L. A. Rosing, chairman of the state committee, called the meeting to order at 12:10. Captain W. H. Harries of Caledonia was recommended by the state committee for temporary chairman, and after being formally chosen by the convention he was escorted to the platform by State Senators J. A. Johnson and Gansewitz. Captain Harries addressed the convention briefly on the issues of the campaign and the outlook for victory at the November election. Scott Jamar was chosen as temporary secretary, and Captain J. D. Wood assistant secretary. There being no contesting delegations Senator S. A. Stockwell of Hennepin county, moved that the list of delegates prepared by the state committee be accepted and the motion was adopted. Judge L. R. Larson of Minneapolis, moved to make the temporary organization permanent and put his own motion which was carried. Mayor Nat Campbell of Crookston moved that a committee on resolutions be appointed to consist of one from each judicial district and three at large and the motion carried.

HON. JOHN LIND.

Thomas Van Etten of Benton county, Peter Nelson, Jr., of Goodhue county, and William Pitt Murray of Ramsey county were chosen as vice presidents.

On motion of T. D. O'Brien a conference committee of one from each congressional district was appointed, consisting of Senator William Gansewitz, William B. Brown, Timothy O'Connor, T. D. O'Brien, E. J. Conroy, Dr. M. B. Cullum and C. W. Stanton.

The convention then took a recess until 3 o'clock.

Governor Lind Renominated.

The conference committee and committee on resolutions were not ready to report when the convention was called to order at 3 o'clock, and Rev. S. W. Sample of Minneapolis was called to the platform and spoke at some length on party issues.

Although the conference committee was not yet ready to report the chairman stated that as there was no question on that point he felt it would be proper to nominate a candidate for governor. He recognized Senator John A. Johnson of Nicollet county, who briefly presented the name of John Lind as a candidate to succeed himself as governor. After the storm of applause had subsided, P. B. Winston of Minneapolis, D. A. Aherle of St. Paul, J. E. Beauvet of Kittson county, and George P. Jones of Rock county, seconded the nomination, which was then made unanimous by a rising vote with a roar of cheers.

A committee consisting of P. B. Winston, George P. Jones and W. B. Hennessy was appointed to escort the governor to the ratification mass meeting.

The resolutions committee finally completed its work and at 5 o'clock Frank N. Stacy, chairman of that committee, read the platform which was unanimously adopted.

Conference Committee Reports.

Senator Gansewitz from the committee on conference reported that Governor John Lind was agreed on as the only candidate for governor. The Populists were given lieutenant governor, two railroad commissioners, and electors from the Third, Sixth and Seventh districts, and one at large, to come from the northern part of the state. It was explained that the Populists had named T. J. Meighan for lieutenant governor, and P. M. Ringdohl and S. M. Owen for railroad commissioners. Hennepin county had endorsed M. E. Nearey for railroad commissioner and delegates from that county opposed the conference report because the selection of Mr. Owen, whose home is in Minneapolis, would shut out Mr. Nearey, who is president of the State Federation of Labor. T. D. O'Brien of the conference committee explained that the only vacancy on the railroad commission belonged to the Populists and that Mr. Nearey had agreed to the matter and his name would be presented for another office later. The report of the committee was then adopted.

T. J. Meighan of Fillmore county, who had been nominated by the Populists for lieutenant governor, was then unanimously endorsed.

Balance of the Ticket Named.

For secretary of state M. E. Nearey of Hennepin county was nominated by T. D. O'Brien. Delegate Logan of Hennepin county declared that Mr. Nearey was not a candidate for the nomination and would not accept it. Professor Wilhelm Patterson's name was also presented. By a rising vote Nearey was overwhelmingly nominated.

H. C. Koerner of Ramsey county was presented by Charles J. Hires of Scott county for state treasurer, and the nomination was made by acclamation.

At this point Mr. Nearey, the nominee for secretary of state, appeared on the platform and stated that although he had been nominated for a different office than that for which he had been endorsed, but as a Democrat he submitted to the decision of the convention and would accept. The announcement was received with great cheering.

J. J. Mullen of Chisago county presented the name of Robert C. Saunders of Pine county for attorney general and the nomination was made by acclamation.

P. M. Ringdahl, the Populist candidate for the 4-year term for railroad commissioner, was endorsed. For the other 4-year term T. J. Knox of Jackson county was presented and the nomination carried by acclamation. Sidney M. Owen, the Populist candidate for the 2-year railroad commissionership, was endorsed unanimously.

A resolution presented by C. J. Hine authorizing the state committee to fill any vacancies on the state ticket was adopted.

For Presidential Electors.

The following electors were chosen: First district, O. W. Anderson; Second district, George Lester; Third district, O. T. Ramsland; Fourth district, Daniel Aherle; Fifth district, F. D. Noerenberg; Sixth district, John Jenswold, Jr.; Seventh district, Thomas C. Hodgson; at large, Dr. Rudolph Schiffman and W. R. Pendergast.

Judge Frank C. Brooks, of Hennepin county, was named by Hennepin county for chief justice and endorsed by Ramsey county. Dr. Law, of St. Louis county, urged the endorsement of Chief Justice Start and Associate Justice Collins, of the Republican ticket. A motion to nominate Judge Brooks by acclamation was made, but the name of Judge Start having been presented the roll was called, resulting Brooks 869, Start 141. Judge Brooks was then formally declared to be the nominee, the nomination being made unanimous.

Judge M. J. Severance of Mankato was nominated by F. A. Pike of Ramsey county for associate justice, and the nomination was about to be made by acclamation when the announcement was made by Former Speaker E. T. Champlain that Judge Severance had announced his intention to vote against Bryan and the nomination was withdrawn. J. C. Nethaway of Washington county was then nominated for associated justice, and the state central committee instructed to fill any vacancies with Democrats or Populists, the motion being stated as intended to prevent the endorsement of any Republican. The convention then, at 7:15 o'clock, adjourned.

THE PLATFORM.

Declaration of Principles Made by Minnesota Democrats.

The following is the platform unanimously adopted by the convention:

The Democratic party of Minnesota, in convention assembled, renews its allegiance to the national Democracy and its principles as enunciated in the platform adopted at Kansas City July 5, 1900.

We rejoice in the renomination of that great American, William Jennings Bryan, and his illustrious associate, Adlai E. Stevenson, for the offices of president and vice president, and bid them godspeed in the struggle in behalf of human liberty and for the preservation of this republic and the maintenance of its Constitution.

We believe that the Constitution follows the flag and that wherever that emblem of liberty floats "it is our plain duty" to give the people the benefit of free trade. Accordingly, we condemn the Porto Rican tariff bill as unconstitutional and un-American and a despotic oppression of a suffering people.

Extend Sympathy to Boers.

We hereby extend to the Boers of South Africa our sympathy in their heroic struggle. We condemn the Republican national administration for its implied hostility to the struggling republic of South Africa and for its failure to express toward them that sympathy which is due a brave and honest people in their defense of liberty. It is the first instance in the history of our country where official expression of sympathy was denied those who were striving to maintain the perpetuity of republics.

We condemn the high protective tariffs imposed by the Dingley bill as having created and fostered trusts and the Republican party for its subserviency to corporate trust power. During the present Republican administration more trusts have been formed than before since he foundation of our government. While the avaricious and controlled the production of the many articles which they manufactured, yet the Republican party, in possession of the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the government, has not made an honest effort to prevent their creation or to enforce the laws restricting their operation.

We heartily approve the efforts of organized labor throughout the country in the endeavor to establish a reduction in the hours of a legal working day and pledge the support of the Democratic party to aid organized labor in its efforts along these lines.

We condemn the Republican party for gerrymandering the legislative districts of this state and promise if the Democratic party is placed in power it will repeal the present unjust apportionment and pass a law in accord with the constitutional requirement of equality between the different sections of the state.

Lind's Administration Endorsed.

We endorse the administration of Governor John Lind as the most efficient, business-like, progressive and close to the people in 40 years of executive administration. It will be known in the history of Minnesota as one conducted by the people, the whole people and no one but the people. We point to the several executive departments as conducted on a clean and thorough basis. Wheat inspection for the first time since the establishment of the state grain department has been conducted with even justice to producer and dealer alike and with satisfaction to all interests. At the same time Minnesota wheat in the world's markets has never been maintained at a higher standard. We point with hearty endorsement to the reductions of railway grain rates in Western and Southern Minnesota, the first time in the history of the state railroad and warehouse commission that said body has reduced railway rates on its own motion, and we endorse the efforts of the administration to secure further reforms in the direction of just transportation rates.

Favor Tax Reform.

We endorse the proposition of Governor Lind to the last legislature for tax reform as one which, based on the experience of progressive Eastern states, would in a few years enable Minnesota to meet the expenditures of the state government from corporate taxes only.

We demand that the gross earnings tax imposed upon railroads be increased to 4 per cent as recommended by Governor Lind to the last legislature. We denounce as hypocritical the plank in the Republican platform upon this question, in view of the fact that the chairman of the late Republican convention was chairman of the judiciary committee of the present senate and in that capacity led the Republican majority in that body in the fight against the gross earnings tax bill, notwithstanding that its passage was demanded by the almost united voice of the people and press of the state.

THE RATIFICATION.

Monster Mass Meeting at the Auditorium in the Evening.

The ratification meeting at the Auditorium in the evening was attended by an immense throng, many being unable to gain admittance. The meeting was preceded by a parade in which marching clubs from St. Paul and Minneapolis participated.

Dr. A. J. Stone officiated as chairman of the meeting. He introduced Mr. Lind in a few well chosen words.

In reply Governor Lind, after thanking the parties for the nomination, turned his attention to national affairs. This part of his speech was an arraignment of the Republican party for its alleged attitude on trusts, imperialism and bimetallism.

Turning to state issues he first referred to tax reform. The governor said:

"When I assumed the discharge of the duties of my office, I found, as I had contended the facts to be in the preceding campaign, that the bulk of the taxes collected by the state and by the municipalities under it were levied and collected from the industries of the masses and upon the people's homes, rather than upon income-bearing wealth and the special advantages and franchises enjoyed by the few.

"To remedy in part this condition of affairs I made three special recommendations to the legislature. One was the imposition of a license fee upon foreign corporations doing business in this state, the same as is imposed upon the formation of corporations under our statute. Second, that the legislature enact legislation providing for the annual doing business in this state, the same as the law authorizes the taxation of domestic corporations. Third, that the gross earnings tax upon the railroad property in this state be increased to a figure somewhat commensurate with the rate of taxation imposed upon other property in the state.

"Of these recommendations the legislature saw fit to act upon one only, and that the least important. By the passage of the law known as the Somerville bill, a license fee was imposed upon foreign corporations for the privilege of doing business in this state."

Notwithstanding its crudity, the governor said, the Somerville law has brought into the state treasury upwards of $50,000. By the omission to adopt his second recommendation, to tax the business of foreign corporations doing business in the state, the Standard Oil trust, which does millions of dollars worth of business in the state annually, or the Federal Steel company, which owns nearly all the valuable mining properties in the northern part of the state, to say nothing of the lucrative business of the various loaning companies, machine companies, and other corporations that enjoy the advantage of our trade, the protection of our laws and the fruits of our industry pay nothing to the state for the privileges they enjoy.

Gross Earnings Tax.

The governor then called attention to the inadequacy of the gross earnings tax. Calling attention to the different states having gross earnings tax laws he said:

"In Iowa railroad property is taxed 3 7-10 per cent on gross earnings. In New York 7 4-10 per cent. In Illinois 5 4-10 per cent. In Massachusetts 6 5-10 per cent. In Missouri 3 8-10 per cent. In Kansas 12 per cent. Were railroads in Minnesota taxed as in Iowa and Wisconsin they would pay one-fourth more taxes than they do now. Were they taxed as high as in Illinois they would pay double their present tax. Were they taxed as high in proportion to earnings as in New York our receipts from that source would be increased over 150 per cent.

"And yet, with all these facts before the Republican legislature of two years ago, with an overwhelming majority, with absolute power to pass or defeat any bill, the senate persistently fought and deliberatly killed a bill to raise the gross earnings tax on the railroad property in this state to 4 per cent. By this action the taxpayers of this state and the state have been deprived of nearly $2,000,000, and I here and now pledge the people of the state of Minnesota that if they elect a house of representatives that and induce the present Republican senate to listen to the arguments of reason, justice, patriotism and duty, that, after the laws thus enacted in accordance with my recommendations have gone into effect, the taxpayers of this state will never again, under ordinary circumstances, be called upon to spend one cent of taxes for the support of the state government, or for the maintenance of state institutions."

Referring to the care of public lands, Mr. Lind spoke of the munificent gift 5,500,000 acres of swamp lands to the state by the government.

"Had this bountiful donation been husbanded even with reasonable care it would have proven ample in time not only to drain the large bodies of wet and untilable lands in the northern part of our state, but it would have contributed much to the maintenance of our state institutions, and our public schools. But former legislatures and executives, with a prodigality little less than scandalous, have succeeded in frittering away more than 3,700,000 acres of that magnificent donation by grants to railway companies for other schemes."

He then spoke of the manner in which the land had been frittered away, referring to the Duluth and Iron Range railroad and other cases as instances.

Tribute to Reishus.

In referring to the administration of the railroad and warehouse commission the governor pays a high tribute to Mr. Reishus as chief inspector of the grain department.

"No. 1 Northern, Duluth, has stood on an average, as compared with the four leading competitive grades in the Liverpool market. 2 cents higher than those grades. During the crop year closed, No. 1 Northern, Minnesota inspection, has ranked 1 to 5 cents per 100 pounds higher in the Liverpool market than No. 1 Northern, Chicago inspection; the average for the year being 3 cents in favor of Minnesota inspection. Throughout the crop year No. 1 Northern, Duluth, and No. 1 hard, Duluth, have uniformly been quoted higher than the corresponding grades, No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, and No. 1 hard, Manitoba. This gratifying result has been effected by enforcing the same standard of excellency upon grain inspected out of the terminal elevators as is applied to the farmers' wheat when it reaches the market."

The matter of regulating railroad rates is treated by Governor Lind at considerable length, and numerous reductions in freight rates are mentioned.

As to the financial condition of the state the governor says:

"The finances of the state were never in better condition than at the present time, nor did its credit ever stand as high as it does today. I confess that I take some pleasure in referring to this fact, in view of the claim made by the opposition two and four years ago that my election as governor of this state would ruin its credit and destroy the business of the people. Thank God the wealth, industry and prosperity of this state, and I might say of this whole glorious country of ours, is better anchored than to be contingent on the political defeat or elevation of any individual.

Treasurer Koerner Complimented.

"During my administration not a cent of the state's fund has been lost or misappropriated, so far as I am advised, or have been able to ascertain. I mention this fact not for the purpose of claiming any personal credit. For the excellent management of our state funds Mr. Koerner, the retiring treasurer, is in a large measure entitled to the credit, and I accord it to him cheerfully. This state has never had a more prudent, painstaking or conscientious servant. I am equally certain that if the gentleman whom you have this day nominated to succeed him is elected, the same may be truly said of him two years hence, as I say it of the outgoing treasurer today."

The work of the insurance commissioner and the dairy and food commissioner is highly commended as is also that of the superintendent of education.

The governor concludes: "With no aim but the honor of our great state and the welfare of our people, with no guide but the law and my conscience, I have administered the affairs of the office which I hold without fear and without favor. This is all that I can promise for the future. Again I thank you for the honor conferred."

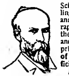
THE FARMER'S GARDEN.



Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrap-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

A Golden Dawn.

said nothing to her father about the impending visit. For the first time she realized in what a different world they both lived.

Something of the deep silent mystery of night seemed to linger round her as she entered the quiet house. She went at once to her father's study, the ring of happy voices, the sound of music, the silver strains of compliment and homage, (all sounding in her ears; the brightness of fair faces ,the sheen of rich dresses and jewels, still before her eyes. Her father, his work ended for the day, was seated at the window, his eyes fixed on the lime trees beneath which his young wife slept. She heard him murmur, as she opened the door:

"How long, Elsie—how long will it be, dear?"

A great solemn hush fell over her. It was as though she had suddenly entered a grand cathedral aisle; the world seemed to fall from her.

She forgot Lady Rosedene and the promised visit, and went with a gentle step to the lonely man, whose heart was buried while his body lived on. She put her arms round his neck, and bent her sweet face over his.

"Papa," she whispered, "shall you never forget, even ever so little?"

"No, my darling, not even ever so little. I live more in that green grave than I do here. There is a shadow over me to-night—a presentiment of coming evil—and in my mind I am going over and over again every happy day of my life spent with her. Sit down here at my feet, Hyacinth, and let me tell you how she lived and died."

Seated in the solemn, beautiful dusk, while the trees moved and the wind sighed in unison, she listened once more to the story of how her mother had been more like a spirit or an angel than a woman—how she had loved the white hyacinths, and how she had died with her little child clasped in her arms.

No wonder that the girl forgot the coming visitor and the coming visit. the last incident of that eventful day which she remembered was her singing in a low, sweet tone to her father until the look of unsatisfied longing faded from his face and he slept.

It was such a different world this from the bright, laughing life that only that afternoon had been unrolled before her. It seemed stranger still when, on the day following, Lady Rosedene's carriage stopped at Sweetbriars, and the footman in his gorgeous livery rapped sharply at the door.

How strange it seemed to see the brilliant lady, with her bright face, her superb dress, in that room where the solitary man always sat, that he might be within sight of his wife's grave!

With that tact that distinguished her, Lady Rosedene at once made her way to his heart. She laid aside her pretty caprices, her pride, her half-sarcastic, half-laughing manner. She recognized that she was in the presence of a deep sorrow, and it impressed her. This pale studious man, with the grief of a lifetime on his face, made a great impression on her. She was earnest, sincere, kind and true. He appeared half startled at the idea of Hyacinth's spending a month at the Hall.

"I am afraid," he remarked, "that it will give my daughter tastes that can never be gratified."

But Lady Rosedene laughed.

"Leave all that to me," she said. "Neither you nor I know how much good fortune is in store for your daughter."

And so the first act of the tragedy was arranged. Hyacinth was on the week following to go to Dene Hall.

Chapter IV.

Dene Hall was the very residence for one who studied the enjoyments of life. It was one of the prettiest homes in England. There was nothing grand or majestic about it; but it was picturesque, artistic and beautiful. There was no recognized form in its architecture, and no two rooms resembled each other. Some had long French windows opening into the grounds, others large bay windows from which one had a magnificent view of the surrounding country. Some were stately and splendid, others small and cozy; there was every variety and there was every shape; every taste could be gratified. The rooms themselves were furnished in different styles—some with splendor, some with simple artistic taste; they were all picturesque, many with pretty nooks where one could talk unobserved by the hour, many full of gems of art. It was a home wherein every one was happy and at ease; there were rare books for the studious, music for those who enjoyed it, out-door amusement for those who preferred it, shady walks, where the trees met overhead, for those who loved solitude.

Lady Rosedene was never alone. She did not know what solitude meant, and never intended to know. She had always a well selected party of visitors at the Hall, and she quietly exulted in the fact that she had now a face to show her friends such as they had never seen before. Lady Rosedene was always in love with her last protegeee, and she was decidedly charmed with Hyacinth Vane.

Hyacinth had been quite at a loss about her dress. In her dilemma she had gone to Mrs. Morley, who had helped her in the difficulty. Francis Vane looked at his daughter with something like a smile on his face, as he gave her the sum of money which seemed to her like a little fortune.

"All this for dress, papa?" she said. "Why, it would buy books for you that would last a lifetime!"

He laughed a quiet, gentle laugh, that she had never heard before from his lips.

"My dear Hyacinth, dress must be your books for the present, and a very nice study it will be for you."

He looked at her with admiration when she came to bid him good-by.

"I am to lose you for a month," he said. "We have never been parted before."

She laid her fair head on his shoulder, and whispered to him that she did not want to leave him then, begging him not to spend the hours of her absence in solitary watch over the green grave.

It was like going from one world into another when she left the lonely study and went out into the sunlight, where Lady Rosedene's luxurious carriage awaited her. It was a novel sensation—a drive of many miles in a splendid open carriage, through some of the most beautiful scenery in England.

She had been disquieted and anxious as to how she should feel amongst strangers, but every thought of hersel, soon died away. The girl's soul seemed wakened to fresh life by all that she saw. The drive was like a dream of sunlight and foliage, of glancing streams and purple hills, of broad shaded roads and green fields.

She was bewildered by the beauty of the park, and by the picturesque appearance of the Hall. The girlish, untried heart sunk when she saw the grandeur of everything around her; but her innate pride and independence came to her aid.

Lady Rosedene, always amiable and considerate, was in the entrance hall to greet her. The girl's heart went out to her graceful, kindly hostess.

Lady Rosedene would go herself to Hyacinth's room.

"I have placed you near me," she said, "so that you may not feel lonely, and that my maid may attend to you, as, of course, you have not brought one."

Hyacinth laughed at the notion, as she thought of the one old-fashioned maid at home. She felt entirely at ease with Lady Rosedene. No one resisted Lady Rosedene for long.

"You will like to understand a little about the Hall before we go down stairs," she said. "Before you dress I will give you a sketch of my chief visitors. The prima donna at present—that is, the lady who sings best, who manages our charades and private theatricals—is Miss Sant. She is one of the cleverest girls in England in her own particular role."

"What is her role?" asked Hyacinth, beginning to feel interested in her new world.

"I should say, amusing others. She is clever and beautiful, and there is a tragedy attached to her that a stranger would never suspect."

"What is the tragedy?" asked Hyacinth, who associated that word only with Greek plays and the works of Shakespeare.

Lady Rosedene hesitated half a moment.

"I may as well tell you," she said; "every one here knows it, and you will be sure to hear it mentioned before you have been in the house many days. Miss Sant was engaged to be married, and a few days before the one fixed for her wedding her lover ran away with her dearest friend."

Hyacinth, to whom all the sin and falsity of the world was as unknown as its pleasures, grew pale at the words; and the only kind of love that she either knew or understood was such as her father had for her mother.

"How dreadful!" she cried, and her eyes opened wide in wonder.

Lady Rosedene smiled at her earnestness. It was plain that love's perfidies were unknown to her. She went on:

"Miss Sant did not break her heart after the usual style of heart-breaking. She laughed as she owned how completely she had been deceived; but she has never been the same girl since. There is something hard, cynical and satirical about her now that no one ever saw in her before. She has refused many offers of marriage—and she is, to my thinking, one of the most brilliant women in English society."

"I should have thought her one of the most miserable," said simple Hyacinth.

Lady Rosedene laughed.

"You will find," she said, "when you know society better, that women have two lives, and that the outer and inner life differ considerably. Women often laugh their brightest when their hearts are breaking; but that is a doleful doctrine to teach you."

"I could never smile while my heart ached," remarked Hyacinth.

"I hope your heart will never ache," was Lady Rosedene's answer. "I must not linger so long over all my visitors, or the dinner bell will ring before you know one-half of them. You will like the Count and Countess de Soldana; he is Spanish, she is Italian, and they are, without exception, the nicest pair I know."

"That is a high character," said Hyacinth; "for I should think in this bright world there are many people very nice and happy."

"Let us hope so, responded Lady Rosedene. "You will admire Miss Letchfred. She is a perfect brunette, sparkling, imperious, very much admired, yet with a certain pride that keeps most people at a distance from her."

"I like that description," said Hyacinth, impulsively; "I shall like her."

"We shall see. Then comes a cousin of my own, Major Tarne—a hero in every sense of the word—an invalided officer, who nearly died of jungle fever in India—a man who is honest in thought and deed."

"I shall like him," said Hyacinth, with a candor that delighted Lady Rosedene.

"I hope you will," she replied. "Then there is Kate Hulton; every one likes her; she is one of the most frank, candid, outspoken girls in Christendom. Brave, high-spirited, and fearless, she has never said an ungenerous word or done a mean action in her life, I am sure; and, withal, she is very pretty, bright and intelligent, if not beautiful. Our only other visitor at present is Sir Harry Beauvoir, and there is nothing extraordinary about him."

Hyacinth laughed the happy, sunny laugh Lady Rosedene loved to hear.

"I should say, then, that he is out of place here, where every one has some extraordinary quality or other."

"Sir Harry helps to cement all the extraordinary qualities in my well eelected party. There must be one or two inanities, just to serve as a foil for the others. Now, shall I send my maid to help you to dress?"

Hyacinth looked at her shyly.

"I think I can manage best without her," she answered; "I have never been accustomed to a maid.'

"You shall do just as you like, my dear; but, remember, a first appearance is everything; and I have made up my mind that you shall produce a certain effect—and I shall be disappointed if my wish is not realized." She laid her hand caressingly on the wealth of golden hair. "It would require an artist to do justice to this. You had better let my maid come; she is a true Parisienne; she knows exactly to the shade of a leaf or the tying of a ribbon what suits every one. I want you to be a belle of belles."

Lady Rosedene, as usual, had her own way. Hortense came, and was delighted with the exquisite beauty of the young visitor. For the first time, Hyacinth began to realize that she was gifted with unusual beauty, and that beauty was of itself a power.

Hortense talked the whole time. She was one of Lady Rosedene's privileged dependents, one who never went one inch beyond the line marked for intercourse between lady and maid. She took the greatest pains with Hyacinth. She dressed the golden hair in such a beautiful and artistic fashion that Hyacinth could hardly believe it was her own. The simple white dinner dress lay on the bed; the Frenchwoman made it elegant and picturesque by means of trailing sprays of green leaves; she made a pretty head-dress of green leaves and white, shining blossoms.

"Is it really I?" asked the young girl, simply, looking in wonder at the beautiful vision of loveliness. Before her was a face fair and pure, clear eyes, and sweet lips. There was a wealth of golden hair, fine, soft and luxuriant. She saw neck and arms white as milk, and perfect as though shaped by sculptor's hands.

Hortense smiled at the words.

"Poets have said beauty wants no adornment," she said, "but to my thinking, Miss Vane, nothing improves any lady, either young or old, so much as dress. That is the bell. My lady said that she would take you to the drawing room herself."

So, flushed with the consciousness of her own loveliness, Hyacinth Vane went with Lady Rosedene into the handsome apartment where she was so eagerly awaited.

CHAPTER V.

It was fairyland to the girl who had no memories save of her father's sad face and the lime-blossoms that hung over her mother's grave. She had tried to imagine what life was like, and had failed. To her father it meant only love and regret; to her it meant longing and hope. Now she saw what it was to others—love, laughter, song, happiness, brightness, and enjoyment of every kind. She saw the smiling faces of fair women, their jewels, the sheen of their dresses, caressing, suave manner, their thousand charms. She saw men with the faces and chivalrous manners she had dreamed of as belonging to the knights of old. She saw lights, flowers, everything beautiful and luxurious, and she woke suddenly to the knowledge of what life meant. Her whole heart went out to it; she held out her arms, as it were, to embrace it.

That first evening passed delightfully. She was even more admired than Lady Rosedene had anticipated. Miss Sant liked her at once; but, in her usual straightforward fashion, she remarked privately to Lady Rosedene:

"I doubt whether, after all, you have acted wisely in bringing that lovely child into society; there is the dawn of a tragedy in her face. Fair, sweet, innocent as it is now, a story will be written there some day, and you will be responsible for it.' I have never seen a girl with such lovely violet eyes who had not a story, and a sad one."

"She is the daughter of a gentleman," replied Lady Rosedene. "I cannot see that I have done anything extraordinary in asking her to visit me."

"I hope you will never repent of it. But I see much in that girl's face beyond mere beauty; there is poetry, passion, love, jealousy. Take care; human hearts are not playthings. Do not try to marry her too well, and let her learn to love some one who will really care for her."

Much as Lady Rosedene liked her candid friend, she was hardly pleased at the warning. "After all," she said to herself, "it matters little what any one says."

The bright days passed. Hyacinth learning many things—to ride, to dance, to drive; the gentlemen delighted in teaching her. She was so frank, so fair, so unspotted by the world, so fresh, so simple and original, they declared it was better than reading poetry to talk to Miss Vane. No one else had the least chance while Hyacinth was near; her beauty, her grace, her wit, her simplicity, her bright intelligence, made her queen of the brilliant society in which she found herself.

One week of the month had passed. Sir Harry declared that he was dying of love. Major Tarne said less, but was evidently captivated by the lovely young belle. Hyacinth laughed at it all; the flattering exaggerations of Sir Harry, the lover-like manner of the handsome major, were all lost on her. She laughed at both. They could never melt her into the faintest gleam of tenderness, or subdue her into one moment's gravity. Lady Rosedene tried once, and once only to direct her, and failed signally.

"My dear Miss Vane," she said, "you are very cruel to your lovers."

"I have no lovers," answered the girl, with a burning crimson flush.

"Your admirers, then. Major Tarne evidently awaits only an opportunity; and he is a good match—few better."

"A good match for what or whom?" asked Hyacinth, with the light of wonderful scorn in her eyes.

Then Lady Rosedene remembered that the jargon of the fashionable world was an unknown tongue to the child of Francis Vane.

"By a good match I mean that he has a large fortune, that he has very influential connections, and holds a high position in the military world."

Something like wonder dawned over the lovely face.

"And would any one marry him simply because he has these advantages?" she asked.

"Certainly—and very properly, too," replied her ladyship.

"I never would," said Hyacinth, with a charming air of decision. "My father says there can be no true marriage without love."

"Of course not," allowed Lady Rosedene, remembering his faithful love, and feeling perplexed how to answer.

"Could any one love a man simply because he has plenty of money or a high position?"

"For those reasons alone, certainly not," answered Lady Rosedene.

"Then, if he is not to be loved for them, he should not be married for them," was the triumphant declaration.

"Hyacinth," said Lady Rosadene, gravely, "do not make what I honestly believe to be the greatest mistake any woman ever makes; do not let your whole life turn upon love. Child, when I made up my mind to enjoy life, I said to myself that I must forego all love. I know we elders may teach and may preach; you younger people listen with a smile; but, believe me, love has far more pain than pleasure. It is a fever that burns, but never cools—a rack on which its victim is always stretched—a serpent that stings—a flower with sharpest thorns—a precipice hidden by fair blossoms—a [illegible] occasionally, yet not [illegible] a curse."

"My father says it is heaven's gift to man," remarked Hyacinth.

"My dear few men love as your father has loved. As a general rule, I believe the men make the women they love supremely happy for a short time and supremely miserable ever afterward. Hyacinth, be advised by me: do not let love spoil your life. You have beauty; you may win position, rank, wealth, everything that makes life bright. Try for that—try to marry some one who can make you rich and respected, who can give you diamonds, carriages, horses, an opera box, country houses and town mansions—never mind love."

Something like wondering gravity came over the lovely childlike face.

"You are very kind, Lady Rosedene," she said; "but I shall never follow your advice. If I marry for anything it will be for love—love such as my father reads and thinks of."

Lady Rosedene threw up her hands in comic dismay.

"Tell me what you think love is?" she asked.

A shy sweet smile dimpled the fresh mouth, the golden head drooped; then the fair face was raised proudly.

"If I tell you, you will only laugh and say, as you always do, that I am simple, or original, or something of that kind. Yet I will tell you. I think love is something so beautiful that no words can tell what it resembles; no words have power to describe it. What the fulfillment of it must be I cannot say, when the very dawn of it, even the faintest foreshadowing, makes the soul tremble."

"My dear Hyacinth!" cried Lady Rosedene; but Hyacinth did not pause.

"It is usual in your world," she went on, "to laugh at love, to sneer at it, to make it subservient to everything else, to make it a plaything or a toy, so that it can never ennoble man or woman; but to me it seems like the crown that blesses and glorifies a little. I hope it will crown mine. And whenever I marry, Lady Rosedene—that is, if I do marry—it will be for love, and love alone."

"I can only say then that I earnestly hope the love will fall on the right person," replied Lady Rosedene.

"That will be as heaven wills," said Hyacinth. "My father says marriages are made in heaven. He often tells me about the summer evening when he first saw my mother. The sun was setting, and he heard a sound of sweet music; and then from the church porch came a quiet, gentle figure that was like the very revelation of love to him. He told me that the love which filled his heart then was the same which will fill his soul when he meets my mother in heaven."

The sweet voice died in a soft, low sigh. Lady Rosedene looked up gravely.

"We look at love from different points of view," she said. "I have studied it in a ball-room—you by the side of a grave."

"There is another difference," observed Hyacinth, gently. "Your love changes with every fashion—it never lasts a lifetime—while such as my father speaks of begins on earth only to end in heaven."

Lady Rosedene sighed. She looked with wonder at the young girl, so inexperienced in life, yet gifted with knowledge so much more profound than her own—with wisdom so much more sweet and simple. She said no more; but after that conversation she never spoke to Hyacinth Vane again about making a good match.

Every day she became more popular, was more beloved. The sweet, simple wisdom she had learned from her father seemed to be part of her beauty. It was new to those about her, as was the fair loveliness of her young face.

One night when the lilies and roses were sleeping, and the world lay at rest—when the moon shone bright, and the nightengales sung in the green heart of the woods, Hyacinth Vane laid her head on the white pillows and dreamed the dreams that come to the young and happy—dreams in which the bright moonlight foreshadowed a golden halo that was to fall around her—a handsome face, which yet she could not see—strong arms that were to clasp her, but whose grasp was shadowy—a low voice that whispered tender words, none of which were plain to her—dreams that were fragments of beauty, music and song.

She woke with the glow of them upon her. The sun was shining full on her window; the ringdoves were cooing; there was not even one white cloud in the blue sky; the whole bright laughing world seemed to call her to new life and new light.

"It seems to me," says Hyacinth Vane, as she threw open the latticed window to let in the perfumed air, "that something is going to happen today."

There was a stir in the youthful soul—a new sensation of life and happiness—was it only the brightness of the summer day, the warmth of the sun, the fragrance of the flowers; or was it the shadow of coming fate resting on the clear young soul?

The sun rose on many mornings for her, but morning never dawned for her with the same sweet smile. She never looked out from lattice window again with the same clear, untroubled mind. The dawn of her fate had risen for her, the great shadow lay upon her, and she was to know the peace of early girlhood no more.

CHAPTER VI.

Most of the guests were assembled in the breakfast room when Hyacinth Vane went down, wild, sweet music rising from her heart to her lips in snatches of song. It was a morning to make even the old feel young, and the young delirious with their own youth and happiness. As she entered the room, Lady Rosedene looked up with a smile.

"I have news that will please you, Miss Vane," she said, "although the people are strangers to you. Elmsthorpe Grange is near Dunwold, is it not?"

"Yes," answered Hyacinth, "it is four miles from the village, with lovely woods between. But the Grange is empty now, and shut up."

"Not now," said Lady Rosedene. "Elmsthorpe Grange, with all the magnificent estate belonging to it, has become the property of a young friend of mine, Alan Branston; he is the next-of-kin to the late squire, who spent the latter part of his life in the south of France. The old squire was a wealthy man, and he has left the whole of his fortune to Alan Branston."

THE COUNTY.

With the holding of the Republican county convention last Saturday and the placing of a full ticket in the field, the nominations for county offices are closed, and we find the following candidates, being respectively the Populist, Democratic and Republican nominees:

Auditor, Adam Zeh, of Red Lake Falls; B. E. Burkee, of St. Hilaire; W. A. Case, of St. Hilaire.

Treasurer, O. T. Tandberg, of Rocksbury; Jake Thill, of Polk Centre; L. Jensen, Red Lake Falls.

Register of deeds: Samuel Gibeau, of Lambert; Edonor Perusse, of Terrebonne; Nels Holberg, of Red Lake Falls.

County attorney: F. A. Grady, of Red Lake Falls; H. W. Lee, of Thief River Falls; L. C. Simons, Red Lake Falls.

Judge of probate: J. L. Johnson, of St. Hilaire; Hon. J. T. Knight, of Red Lake Falls; Anatole Bachand, Lambert.

Sheriff: E. A. Moran, Red Lake Falls; Dan Linnehan, Red Lake Falls; Chas. Sampson, Gervais.

Supt. of schools, Frank Jeffers, Red Lake Falls; Prof. J. B. O'Brien, St. Hilaire.

Coroner, Jos. Belair, Red Lake Falls; Dr. I. Lemieux, Red Lake Falls; Dr. Henry Grundy, Thief River Falls.

County surveyor, Day F. Stacy, of Red Lake Falls.

Commissioner, 2d district, Thos. Belair, Red Lake Falls township; 4th district, G. Jarmen; L. Hansen, both of Thief River Falls.

The question naturally arises, with three tickets in the field, how is the vote of the three parties to be guaged? If it was to be a test of mere party strength, it would be fair to presume the Republicans would have the best of it, since the fusion vote of the other two parties is split this year. Taking the vote of two years ago as a criterion, we find that the total registration was 2079, the total vote, 1663. There was fusion between the Populists and Democrats on the state ticket, and there was besides this a Mid Road Populist ticket. The vote on lieutenant governor, which doubtless represents the party strength as near as it can be gotten at was, Fusion, 877; Republican, 508; Mid Road, 92; Prohibition, 52. It is impossible to make an accurate estimate as to the strength of either the Democratic or Populist parties individually, but on county matters, as shown in the last election, political lines are often disregarded, and the individual strength of the candidate is the main feature. In the face of the figures, and the division of the vote as above, several points are too clear to need elaboration, and they no doubt are only too visible to some of the rain-bow chasers.

REPUBLICAN TICKET.

Those who expected to see the Republicans of Red Lake county nominate a patchwork or partial ticket are disappointed. The Republicans have their war paint on and will put up a hard fight. Their ticket has some strong nominees.

DULUTH GROWS.

The population of Duluth is 52,969, as against 33,115 ten years ago, an increase of 19,854, or 60 per cent. The population in 1880 was 838, showing an increase of 32,377, or 3851.67 per cent from 1880 to 1890.

Leo Steinert vs. Marcus Johnson and the Red Lake Falls Milling company, was the title of a suit that occupied the attention of Justices Taylor and Toupin Tuesday morning. Mr. Healy's efforts in this direction will certainly be appreciated by the veterans and their friends, and our citizens will also take note of this disinterested effort, as evidencing the proper spirit.

Fables of the Rail--II.

An honest, Horny-handed Farmer who owned a Nice farm, through which ran the North-Western Line trains, used to spend so much Time watching the beautiful trains as they passed by filled with people, that he neglected his crop and was ruined and he died in the poor house.

Moral — If he had been located on some other road with less attractive trains he would probably have grown rich and gone to congress. As it was he died a poor honest man.

Insist UPon Having Royal.

Royal Baking Powder is in the stock of probably every dealer in the State. If not the grocer will add to the reputation of his store by keeping it.

Royal Baking Powder itself, and the packages which contain it, comply with all the food laws and every other law of the state, and if any dealer attempts to hinder its sale he does so for the purpose of palming off upon the customer a cheap and inferior substitute.

Consumers requiring pure, healthful baking powder, free from alum, should call for Royal. The authorities certify this brand of greatest value, highest in strength, pure and wholesome.

AVOID PAYING TAX

EXPRESS COMPANIES GAINERS BY A MISTAKE IN A STATE LAW.

Democrats Name a Ticket Headed by Lind for Governor—Trouble for Railroad Commissioners — Good Indian Dead — Nominations for Congress. Northwestern Photographers Meet. State News in General.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 8.—The state will not press its case against the express companies transacting business in Minnesota, for the collection of a 1½ per cent tax on their gross earnings, alleged to be due under a law passed by the last legislature. The attorney general has decided that the only grounds on which the state could bring an action are such as to give little prospect of their being upheld in court.

The bill as finally passed by the legislature was a measure imposing a tax of 4½ per cent on the gross earnings of all express companies on business carried within the state. By mistake the enrolled bill signed by the governor provided for a 5 per cent tax. The express companies paid a 3 per cent tax on their earnings this year under a former law.

LIND FOR GOVERNOR.

Minnesota Democrats Meet and Nominate a State Ticket.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 8.—The Democratic state convention was called to order at noon by State Chairman Rosing and Captain W. H. Harries selected for temporary chairman. The list of delegates as handed in by the state committee was accepted and the temporary organization made permanent. After selecting a committee on resolutions the convention recessed until 3 p. m.

After reassembling the convention proceeded to the nomination of a candidate for governor although the conference committee named to meet with the Populists was not ready to report. Senator Johnson of Nicollet county placed in nomination John Lind, the present incumbent, and he was named by acclamation.

The conference report was then made. It gave to the Populists the lieutenant governor and one 4-year and one 2-year railroad commissioner.

The ticket was then completed as follows: Lieutenant governor, T. J. Meighan; secretary of state, M. E Nearey; treasurer, H. C. Koerner; attorney general, R. C. Saunders; chief justice, Frank C. Brooks; associate justice, J. C. Nethaway; railroad commissioners, 4-year terms, P. M. Ringdal and T. J. Knox; 2-year term, S. M. Owen.

The platform endorses the platform and candidates of the Kansas City convention, extends sympathy to the Boers, condemns the Porto Rican tariff law, the Dingley bill and trusts, favors organized labor, eulogizes Lind's administration and demands certain state legislation.

In the evening a monster ratification meeting at the Auditorium was addressed by Governor Lind.

PLAYING A WAITING GAME.

Railroads Will Let Minnesota Commissioners Take the Initiative.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 6.—When the railroad and warehouse commission confronted the representatives of the railroads of the state and asked the latter to submit evidence to show wherein the proposed rate schedules were unreasonable, the railroads turned tables effectively, and took up a position which put the commission at a serious disadvantage.

The belief that the railroads will compel the commission to take the initiative and order the rates into effect, is amply confirmed. This attitude places the burden of proof upon the commission. This body will now have to convince the courts that the schedules are not excessive and confiscatory.

SHOWS A DECREASE.

Lake Superior Traffic For August Only 3,714,774 Tons.

DULUTH, Sept. 10.—Last month's freight traffic of Lake Superior amounted to 3,714,774 tons, which was a falling off of about 7 per cent from the highest total, that of the preceding month. This was due to a smaller business in both iron ore and grain. There have passed into and out of Lake Superior to date this year more than 16,400,000 tons of freight, or more than in any entire season of navigation prior to 1896, and there are still three months to hear from.

"Omaha Kid" Is Convicted.

ROCHESTER, Minn., Sept. 10—Thomas O'Neil, alias the "Omaha Kid," was convicted of being one of the gang of safe crackers who blew up the safe in the bank at Dover, Minn., last month and secured over $4,000 in cash. A stay of execution was granted for 30 days.

For a New Courthouse.

DULUTH, Sept. 7.—The county board of St. Louis county has adopted a resolution providing that a proposition be submitted to the people at the November election to issue bonds to the amount of $250,000 to build a new courthouse.

MAY BE LYNCHED.

Trio of Footpads at La Crosse Kill a Policeman on Duty.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Sept. 10.—One of the most dastardly crimes in the history of La Crosse was committed about 1:30 a. m., when Patrolman Perry Gates was shot dead by a trio of thieves whom he was about to arrest for holding up a man on the La Crescent bridge, leading from this city, and robbing him of $9. The men came to the city and it was the intention of the officers to arrest the thieves at the wagon bridge.

On their way to the bridge they met the robbers and Gates ordered them to halt, whereupon all three lined up on the sidewalk and pulling their revolvers fired at the policeman. All the shots struck him, one on each arm and the other in the abdomen. Gates fell out of the patrol wagon and dropped dead on the ground. The shots frightened the horses and his companion officer, Schubert, was unable to control them and they ran away.

Scores of men are scouring the country, some armed with Winchesters, and if the murderers are caught there is a strong probability of a lynching bee.

The men are evidently the gang who have been working in Minnesota and Iowa and have some bad crimes charged up to them or they would not resort to such desperate means of escape.

BOTH USED BUGGIES.

Des Moines Policeman Pursues a Negro Murderess Through the Streets.

DES MOINES, Sept. 11.—Mattie Nash, colored, shot and fatally injured William Foster, also colored, at the home of Miss Nash's father. Miss Nash alleges Foster had failed to keep a promise to marry her. She attempted to escape in a buggy but was pursued and captured by Sergeant of Police Morris, who gave chase in a buggy belonging to Fire Chief Burnett. The race was through the business portion of the city. The pursuers collided with a carriage containing Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Putnam and Mrs. M. A. Hayss. The occupants were thrown out, Mrs. Hayes sustaining fractures of the skull which are expected to prove fatal. The others were less seriously injured. Miss Nash was confined in the city jail to await hearing.

Killed by a Former Lover.

WAUKESHA, Wis., Sept. 6.—Mrs. E. Miller was shot on her doorstep and instantly killed by Paul Cronin, a former lover. Cronin then turned the revolver on himself and inflicted a fatal wound. The affair happened near the center of the city and was the result of continued rebuffs of Cronin by Mrs. Miller, who had tired of his attentions.

Iowa Miners Called Out.

DES MOINES, Sept. 6.—The union miners, members of the United Mine Workers of America, have been called out of the Saylorville mine, near this city, and the mines of the Consolidated Coal company at Muchakinock and Baxter. These mines are the only ones in Iowa that have not signed the union scale.

Sawmill Starts Monday.

A sufficient quantity of logs is now on hand to keep the saw mill running until the freeze-up, and a six weeks' run is anticipated, unless cold weather sets in unusually early. The mill will be run twelve hours and a half a day, so as to take advantage of the favorable weather while it lasts. Although this has been a bad year, the Red Lake Falls saw mill has done a creditable amount of cutting.

Another County Ditch.

The farmers living in the northern portion of Red Lake Falls township have long felt the need of a short drainage ditch, which would carry off their surplus water, and they have decided to petition the county commissioners to construct a ditch running from the east line of section one in that township a distance of about four miles due west, terminating at the ravine on section four. Messrs. John Maricau and Joseph Bole were in the city Saturday taking the initial steps towards bringing the matter properly before the county board.

Insist Upon Having Royal.

Royal Baking Powder is in the stock of probably every dealer in the State. If not the grocer will add to the reputation of his store by keeping it.

Royal Baking Powder itself, and the packages which contain it, comply with all the food laws and every other law of the state, and if any dealer attempts to hinder its sale he does so for the purpose of palming off upon the customer a cheap and inferior substitute.

Consumers requiring pure, healthful baking powder, free from alum, should call for Royal. The authorities certify this brand of greatest value, highest in strength, pure and wholesome.

THE WATER SUPPLY OF INDIA

THE country of rivers is the country of droughts! Where rain is abundant the people lack water. Three glorious river systems bless India—the northeastern, the great Brahmaputra in its lead; the northwestern, its famous Indus sweeping to the sea; the more central, with the broad Ganges which drains the slopes of the Himalayas themselves.

Why, then, should India suffer drought and the people lack water? Because the country's surface does not readily admit of irrigation from the great rivers and because the rainfall is unsteady. Could the mighty floods of the Brahmaputra, Indus and Ganges be made largely available for agriculture the scene would brighten. Did the rains fall steadily at brief intervals the difficulty would disappear, but the great rivers take their imperial course, and the rains are centered in June-July and October-November.

Seventy-five per cent of India's people cultivate the soil. Could one get a birdseye view of the land, it would be seen that the universal effort was for water in the fields. The uplands studded with tanks; the smaller rivers crossed by numberless dams; the beds of dry streams marked by water pits; wells everywhere on every hand. Save in the rainy seasons the contest is literally from day to day. By large buckets raised from wide, deep wells by oxen; by lesser buckets lifted by hand; by pailfuls brought from some ditch or reservoir, as well as by normal irrigation, the hundreds of millions of India combat drought. But when, for one rainy season, the rains are withheld the universal battle becomes instantly one of life and death. If, for a twelvemonth, there are no showers, the people perish, and the struggle becomes impossible.

FOUND STARVING ON THE ROAD.

The latest cablegram from the American consul at Bombay states that rains have ceased and crops are withering. Millions still face starvation. Let America maintain her splendid benevolence." This paper will receive and acknowledge contributions to be sent to the Committee of One Hundred, Brown Bros. & Co., treasurers, 59 Wall street, New York. All Christendom must join hands for the rescue!

The Republican Rally.

The days of the torch light procession seem to be over, but the music of the band and the outpouring of the populace despite the rain Tuesday night, was evidence that political activity had commenced. Congressman Eddy, who is making his fourth canvass for congressional honors, was the attraction, and as a drawing card he certainly was a success. We have never seen a more crowded house than the one that faced him as he took the rostrum to address our people on the issues of the day. He has not changed in his manner of address, unless that he is more witty, and there was not a dry sentance in his speech. He is not an orator, but he is a fascinating talker, and a great campaigner, perhaps the greatest in the state, if the measure is in the degree of his success in overcoming large adverse majorities.

Dr. N. M. Watson, chairman of the Republican county central committee, presided. Beside him on the platform were several of the county candidates, and C. G. Rapp, the legislative nominee.

The large attendance, considering the rainy night, was a surprise to many, and tends to show the interest taken in the campaign. Many ladies were present, and they were provided with seats near the speaker.

Mr. Eddy spoke on the subject of the Free Homes bill, of which he was the author, and says it is now operative, and no homesteader on the Reservation will henceforth need to pay one cent for his land when he proves up. Mr. Eddy is naturally proud of his Free Homes bill, which virtually gives $200 to every homesteader on the ceded Reservation, and makes the offer that if any homesteader, who has complied with the law, does not get the land absolutely free, under the Free Homes law, he will pay the costs himself. There are about 1700 homesteaders in his district who will get the benefit of this law.

Fables of the Rail--II.

An honest, Horny-handed Farmer who owned a Nice farm, through which ran the North-Western Line trains, used to spend so much Time watching the beautiful trains as they passed by filled with people, that he neglected his crop and was ruined and he died in the poor house.

Moral — If he had been located on some other road with less attractive trains he would probably have grown rich and gone to congress. As it was he died a poor honest man.

Chas. Eklund finished his shock threshing last Friday just in time for the heavy rain that fell the same day. He started on stacks Monday.

Firemen's Ball.

The Fire Laddies held a meeting Monday night, and made arrangements for holding their Second Annual Ball. Committees have been appointed, and the date set for Oct. 4th. It is proposed to make this outrank in point of brilliancy even the ball of a year ago, so the society people of the city and county may as well prepare for something worth attending.

DENIED IN TOTO.

Register of Deeds Gibeau Makes a Statement.

Red Lake Falls, Minn., Sept. 18, 1900.

Mr. Editor:

Last week's issue of the Thief River Falls News contains an abusive article accusing me of giving money to Edonor Perusse to prevent him from being a candidate. This is wholly and entirely false. I have not either to himself or an agent or any person WHOMSOEVER offered or given $200 or any other sum to Edonor Perusse to induce him to withdraw as a candidate. The implication is an injury to Mr Perusse as well as to myself, and cannot be too strongly condemned by all fair-minded voters. The same article attempts to minimize my plurality of the last general election, but this is refuted by the files of the editor's own paper dated Nov. 24, 1898, which gives me nearly three times as much.

In conclusion I will state that two years ago I made a clean and honest contest for the office of Register of Deeds, and this year I propose doing so again. I consider myself above using, or repeating studied falsehood to gain an office, and if the editor of the News wishes to impress the importance of certain candidates through this channel, he shall do so untrammelled by me. Trusting in the intelligence of the voters of this county to vindicate me at the polls, in November.

Thanking you Mr. Editor for the courteous concession of this space in your valuable paper, I remain.

Very Respectfully.
Samuel Gibeau.

INDIA'S AWFUL FAMINE.

BEFORE THE FAMINE

THE sympathy of Americans with India's sufferers would doubtless be greater if there was a clearer realization of the sort of people who are dying of starvation and exposure. In famine photographs the forms and faces almost forbid love or respect. I have eagerly wished that our people might have seen the people of India before the famine drought came and made them the horrible objects which we are compelled to pity and help. The races, or branches of races, in India are many. There is the old Dravidian stock of the south, the hill folk of central India, including the wild Bhils, whom Kipling has so faithfully described; great tribes who are clearly akin to the Chinese; and the high caste Hindoos of the noble Aryan race. These are some of the races of that India whose early life is literally prehistoric. Before the Greek had dreamed of beauty, or the Roman of conquest, the inhabitants of India were skillfully cultivating the soil, domesticating useful animals, working metals, weaving cloth, wearing clothes and fashioning primitive forms of society and government.

A VICTIM OF FAMINE.

The people of India are, in general, quite worthy of being regarded as our kindred. They are comely, intelligent, fond of home and devoted to the arts of peace. Many of their ways would please us, and many of their characteristics would win our admiration.

WAITING FOR FOOD.
FAMINE'S APPEAL.

Such are they who are dying of starvation and exposure. Naturally gentle eyes are now fierce with hunger or weep themselves to blindness because no help comes. Hands that wrought pleasantly in work or worship now dig the earth for roots and vermin or strike the starving neighbor who would share the dreadful morsel. Mothers, crazed by want of nourishment, leave their children to perish. Children that sang and played and thought home the dearest spot on earth now wander helpless and hopeless until strength fails and the jackal finds his awful feast.

The outlook for the next few months is gloomy. Rains have come three weeks late. Many farmers are without seed. Their work cattle have perished. The men themselves, enfeebled by starvation, cannot properly prepare the soil. The autumn harvest will be inferior. Till these are gathered there can be no essential improvement in the situation. Clothing and shelter are urgently needed. Tens of thousands of orphaned deserted children must be cared for.

Yet the situation is not without favorable conditions. The greater part of India has been blest with rain, and the fields have yielded plentifully. Consequently there is a supply of the cheap, nutritious food grains on which the common people subsist, and those grains are poured into the famine district like a mighty river. Since last October more than three billion pounds of millet and rice and kindred grains have come in by way of Bombay alone, and not a bushel of wheat exported. So that it is still true that 2 to 5 cents a day will save a life, and 6 cents give food, clothing and shelter.

The British government cares for more than six millions each day. The people of Great Britain care for hundreds of thousands. There remain many more in mortal peril. This is America's opportunity. Contributions from the United States averaging one-tenth of a cent a day from each inhabitant, would abundantly meet the need. Oh, men and women and children of America, your kindred across the seas are dying of hunger and exposure! They are within your reach!

The great civic and national agency of famine relief is the New York Committee of One Hundred, William E. Dodge, chairman, and Brown Bros. & Co., 59 Wall street, New York, treasurers. This committee, with which similar committees throughout the country co-operate, has received over $200,000. Contributions are cabled weekly, without expense, to the Americo-Indian Famine Relief Committee at Bombay, United States Consul William T. Fee, chairman, and the veteran missionary administrator, Robert A. Hume, executive secretary. The New York committee will send illustrated literature, without charge, to all who will co-operate in its work. Correspondence should be addressed to L. T. Chamberlain, 73 Bible House, New York.

This paper gladly opens its columns for the receipt and acknowledgment of gifts to be forwarded either to the New York committee or to some co-operating committee.

BRITISH-BOER WAR NEWS.

Burghers are reported to be fighting among themselves.

General French has occupied Barberton after slight opposition. He captured 43 locomotives and much rolling stock.

The government of the Netherlands has telegraphed to Lourenzo Marques offering a Dutch warship to bring Mr. Kruger to Holland.

General Roberts has issued a proclamation telling the Boers that President Kruger deserted them and asking them to lay down their arms.

President Kruger and his state officers have arrived at Lourenzo Marques. It is reported that they will sail for Europe Sept. 24 on the German steamer Herzog.

The flight of President Kruger from what is now designated as the Vaal River Colony and his arrival at Lourenzo Marques is regarded in London as indicative of an early end of the hostilities in South Africa.

Lord Roberts reports from Machadodorp, under date of Wednesday, Sept. 12, that General French was heavily engaged that day with the Boers in the hills west of Barberton and that General Hutton had gone to support General French.

According to the Lourenzo Marques correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph Mr. Kruger is virtually a prisoner in the residence of the district governor. This is at the instance of the British consul, who protested against Mr. Kruger using Portuguese territory as a basis for directing his executive.

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

A Golden Dawn.

Hyacinth repeated the name to herself. The sound of it pleased her. There were music and freshness in it—something that seemed to stir her heart and soul. Lady Rosedene went on:

"You have heard of the old squire, of course, Miss Vane?"

"I have heard him spoken of," she replied. "My father saw him once, many years ago; since then the Grange has been desolate and solitary."

"It will not be any longer," replied Lady Rosedene. "Alan Branston takes possession of it at once. A whole army of work-people are on the way to it. He will spend a fortune on it, and it will be one of the most superb homes in England. The young squire has arranged to stay a month with me, so that he can personally superintend the most important alterations. I expect him this morning."

There were a few comments from the guests, and then the subject changed. But Hyacinth seemed to have something worth thinking about. It had been her custom after breakfast to put on her hat and go out into the grounds, and she was generally attended by a little court of admirers; but on this morning a longing for solitude seized her, and she looked with pleading eyes at the gallant soldier who drew near to her.

"Let me gather my roses alone this morning, Major Tarne," she said; and he was compelled to retreat.

Sir Harry was received with a charming pout, and a look which said so plainly, "Pray do not trouble me," that he bowed, discomfited, and went away.

She laughed to herself a sweet, girlish laugh, and went down the great avenue of limes, wondering why she cared so much for being alone, wondering what was hidden in the summer morning. And then she began to think of Alan Branston and Elmsthorpe Woods. She had loved them with a wonderful love. She had been accustomed to spend long hours in those green solitudes, and she wondered if he would be willing to allow strangers there.

"Alan Branston of Elmsthorpe"—she liked the sound of the name—it had a great attraction for her. She went on walking gently until she came to the end of the great avenue; at that point the green, undulating park began. The grass was thick and beautiful; she sat down to rest, and in the music of rippling leaves she seemed to hear the young squire's name.

Suddenly a tall shadow fell across the grass, and, raising her eyes, she saw the face that was her doom. Two dark, clear, bright eyes met her own, and seemed to hold her spellbound until the gentleman recovered himself, and, with a low bow, drew a step nearer. She rose hurriedly and stood before him, the loveliest picture on which a man's eye could rest, the sunlight falling on her golden head and flower-like face.

"Do not let me disturb you," he said; and again the wonderful power of his eyes seemed to hold her captive. "I am unfortunate enough to have lost my way; I walked through the park. Can you tell me which path leads to the Hall?"

"The one through the avenue of limes," she said. "I am going—but, no, you will easily find it."

was so handsome, so gallant, so brave,

"If you are going in that direction," he cried, eagerly, "I assure you I should be most grateful for you guidance."

He looked so eager, so handsome, so imploring, that she said to herself there could be no harm in going a few steps at least in the same direction.

Hyacinth walked toward the lime avenue with him, and then in some strange manner it came out that he was Alan Branston of Elmsthorpe. While she lived she remembered the little patch of yellow flowers at her feet, the tall trees overhead, the foxgloves swaying as she passed them; every little detail impressed itself upon her memory, to remain there while life lasted.

She raised her face to his.

"Are you the new squire?" she said.

He smiled, wondering how she had discovered who he was. They had reached the end of the avenue long before he had finished his eager questions about Dunwold. The picturesque old Hall stood before them.

"Why, I have brought you all the way!" said Hyacinth, in dismay. "There is the house. Lady Rosedene is on the lawn."

He looked, and before he could say another word she was gone—gone back to the park where he had found her half an hour since. But all the world was changed to her; there was new brightness in the sunshine, new colors on the grass. Nothing apparently had happened, yet the world seemed quite different, and was never the same to her again.

She was half shy when the hour for luncheon came. As she crossed the lawn, she saw the major waiting for her, and Sir Harry hovering in the distance. They both looked somewhat curiously at her; there was a new light on her face. It was no longer the face of a child; the dawn of passion and womanhood was on it.

There was much talking and laughing in the dining room. In the midst of a group, she saw Alan Branston talking to Lady Rosedene, who turned quickly to her.

"This young lady is one of your nearest neighbors, Mr. Branston," she said; "let me introduce you to Miss Vane."

The lovely blushing face drooped before the sudden fire of admiration that she saw in his eyes. Neither of them said a word as to the previous meeting. Lady Rosedene, with her quick eyes, noted the girl's blush, and a sudden idea come to her; with her usual impetuosity she would have spoken, but she restrained herself; one word might have spoiled the whole scheme that had suddenly shaped itself in her mind. Alan Branston must marry Hyacinth. He had wealth, a fine old manor-house, and everything that was luxurious; she had beauty, and gentle training.

"It is the very thing," said the lady to herself. "Providence must have arranged it; there could be no more suitable marriage than this."

For the first time in her life Lady Rosedene paused for quiet reflection, and then turned away, lest by one word she would mar what seemed to her the finest idea she had ever made.

"Are you staying here for any time?" asked Alan, when they were alone.

"Lady Rosedene invited me for a month," Hyacinth answered; "I may remain longer. If my father wants me, I shall, of course, go at once."

"I hope your father will not want you," he said. "If you were to go now, I should feel that I had been deprived of all the pleasure I anticipated from my visit. I did not mention to Lady Rosedene that I had met you."

A lovely flush of color came over her face.

"Why not?" she asked, with down-dropped eyes.

"I thought I read in your eyes that you would rather I did not name it."

Her heart beat faster at the words.

"I did not know that my eyes told such stories; I must keep them closed," she replied, laughingly.

"If you do, it will be to me as though the sun had set," he said; and the words did not seem like flattery to her.

There was some strange attraction to her in the handsome young squire; a glamour such as had never fallen over her now. In some vague, curious way that she could hardly understand the world seemed suddenly to concentrate itself in that spot where she stood—so much so, that when the dressing-bell rang a thrill of impatience passed over her; she felt grieved to be disturbed.

His eyes lingered on her until she had quitted the room, and then he roused himself with a deep sigh, like one who comes suddenly to himself after a dream. This dainty, delicate girl, with the tender eye of a child and a woman's sweet mouth, with a voice sweet as music and a laugh like the chime of silver bells—he had seen no one like her; while Hyacinth went to her room with a new world open to her.

The pretty pale silks, the clear white muslins, the delicate wonders of lace, were all set before her; and she, who laughed on the preceding day at the number of her dresses, now sighed because not one was pretty enough. Hortense was very patient.

"You could have no prettier dress than this, Miss Vane," she said; "the blue is very pale, and the white lace looks rich and elegant."

So Hyacinth sat with sweet, dreamy eyes, while Hortense brushed out the golden waves of hair, and arranged the pretty dress. She looked like some beautiful picture from a frame, with her flower-like face—a lovely smile parting the fresh lips—her white neck and bare rounded arms, so fair, so tender—with all the halo of youth around her, the first faint dawning of love giving to her a beauty that nothing else on earth could give.

CHAPTER VII.

It all seemed so strange to Alan Branston. He had seen a hundred fair women, with love in their eyes and on their lips—none of them had moved him. He had seen court beauties, the fair women of great cities—not one had lived in his heart. But this girl had looked with the sweet tender eyes of a child into his own, and his soul had gone out to her. After that first glance, she stood apart from the whole world to him. Whatever might happen through his fancy, the one great love of his life was for her, and no other should have it.

He waited patiently until she came down into the drawing-room. No matter what Lady Rosedene said, he should take her in to dinner and sit by her side. He felt already an impatient kind of jealousy lest any one should be before him. He stood near the door so that he should be able to join her at once.

The door opened and she came in—lovely, golden bright, and like a rose, so fair, so dainty. And as she drew near she gave him one of the most coy glances that ever made a man's heart beat—one of the most delicious smiles that ever thrilled a man's heart. There was an attraction, a something, that drew them together; neither knew what it was, neither understood it, save that it was sweeter and stronger than they had imagined anything in life to be.

Lady Rosedene gratified the desire of his heart. She asked him to take Miss Vane into dinner. Neither of them saw the corridors or the doors. They sat at the sumptuously-spread dinner-table, almost without an idea of what was on it. The whole world was glorified to them. They ate ambrosia from golden plates; they sipped nectar from golden cups.

Long before the dinner was over Alan Branston had lost himself in the light of Hyacinth's eyes. More than one present smiled to see how completely they had forgotten the world in each other. Some sighed as they smiled, for the golden hours of youth and love fly so quickly. It was pretty to see. He with a careless laugh, a happy smile, in his dark eyes; he had a rich ringing voice, a chivalrous easy manner. He was the beau ideal of a lover—ardent, poetical, pleasant in every word and look, with a lordly protecting air that was irresistable. She was so dainty in color and shape, so perfect in her fresh girlish loveliness, that she looked more like one of the sweet flowers she was named after than anything else.

It was pretty to see the light in her eyes and the flush of expectation on her face when the ladies in the drawing-room awaited the coming of the gentlemen. Some subtle attraction drew Alan at once to her side. He took the chair nearest to her, and, as Lady Rosedene expressed it to herself, remained there "a fixture," all the evening. Some "charitable lady," as Alan mentally called her, sat down to the piano, and under cover of the music he was able to talk.

"I've been trying to think," he said, "what it is of which your eyes remind me. The blue of them recalls something to my memory, and I hardly know what it is. I have it!" he cried, suddenly. "They are of the same color as the deep blue cornflowers that grow in France."

"They grow in England, too," answered Hyacinth.

"Yes; but they look poor when compared with the blue ones that bloom under the warm skies of France. I shall take the cornflower for my favorite flower, as Napoleon took the violet, and the Bourbons the lily. I will alter the arms of my family, and add a cornflower to them."

"All because my eyes are blue?" she asked, laughingly.

"I begin to think that everything most beautiful is blue," he said. "It is the color of the heavens, of the Southern seas, of the cornflower, of your eyes."

She laughed.

"That sounds like flattery," she told him.

"Oh, no," he replied. "It is sweetest truth. What a strange thing that I should have come just now while you are here! If I had missed this visit, I might never have seen you."

"And then?" she asked, with a sudden paling of her lovely face.

"Then?" he said. "Why, the world would have been different, as it is different now;" and the evening was over before—to them—it had seemed to begin.

"Is your name really Hyacinth?" he asked her a few days afterward. "I heard Lady Rosedene call you so."

"Yes. It was my mother's choice," she answered simply; and she told him how proud her young mother had been of the beautiful white hyacinths, and how in dying she had asked that their name might be given to her.

A sudden gleam of tenderness came into his eyes, as she told him of her quiet home, and the solitary man whose only happiness consisted in watching over his wife's grave.

"How real everything must be to you," he said—"how real all love and all sorrow!"

"Are they not real to you?" she asked.

"I fancy that contact with the world in some measure takes the earnestness and the reality from most things. Men try to glide away from sorrow in the world, and look upon love as a jest; to you they are both sacred and solemn."

"They are part of heaven," she answered, simply. "My father says that love is a tree—the roots are on earth, the flowers are in heaven. He says sorrow is the fire that prepares us for heaven."

He looked at the lovely, guileless young face.

"And you believe what your father teaches, no doubt?" he said.

"Certainly. I think my father is one of the wisest as he is one of the simplest men on earth."

It was pretty to watch how they liked to steal off into the grounds, believing that no one noticed them. When Lady Rosedene saw them in the avenue of limes, she would say jestingly:

"Do not go down by the lime trees—our young lovers are there."

Major Tarne and Sir Harry gave up hope. Every one in the household seemed to have a kindly interest in Miss Vane and Mr. Branston. Those who were old renewed their youth in watching this pretty love poem.

It was pleasant to watch Hyacinth's when her lover was near. Its fitful flushes, happy smiles, love-lit eyes, the sunshine that seemed to emanate from her, made everything around appear bright. Lady Rosedene was delighted. She had planned what the world was pleased to call many good matches; but this was different from any of them. This was a case of true love, such as she seldom had to deal with, and her ladyship grew young again as she watched it.

It was pleasant to see Hyacinth's fair face looking like a rose that had been bathed in dew. Repeatedly she wore a flower in her breast that had been gathered by her young lover.

The old, old story ran its length—there were lovers' quarrels, half hours when to both of them the lovely bright world was only a funeral vault, when every hope seemed ended, caused, perhaps, by one word misunderstood. There were hours when she felt sure he did not care for her, and he feared it was all a mistake to imagine she loved him. They were due to pretty lovers' quarrels that had in them pathos enough to make one weep, and comedy enough to make one laugh, and the old story was told over and over again by them to the same rhythm, the same music, the same smile and, tears, as accompany it everywhere.

Alan Branston was happy as a man could be—brave, quick, energetic, ardent, hopeful, while Hyacinth gave herself up to a passionate happiness that was almost pitiful to see.

The day came when Alan sought his fair young love and asked her to be his wife—neither of them forgot it in the dark hours of the future they both had before them. One afternoon Alan had grown desperate, and said he must speak to her that same evening, that he must have her promise to become his wife. Under the cover of a song, he whispered to her:

"Hyacinth, the stars are shining; do you think you could steal out into the lime-avenue for five minutes? I have something I must say to you; the words are burning my heart away. Will you come?"

She looked up at him with a shy, hurried, sweet glance.

"What have you to say that is so important?" she asked coyly.

"Can you not guess, my darling? Oh, Hyacinth, do try to manage it! I must speak to you."

"You are speaking to me now," she said, with a happy smile.

"I know it, with forty eyes looking on! Come out under the stars, my darling; I want to see you alone, where I may whisper something to you, and touch that sweet white hand of yours. Will you come, my darling? You will not be missed for five minutes, and I can say all I have to say in that time."

Her heart beat fast, her eyes fell before the fire of his. The passion of his words moved her strangely.

"I will come," she said.

She was almost puzzled how to manage it; but a few minutes afterward some of the visitors became greatly excited over some glees, and during the performance of them she found a chance of going away without attracting attention.

It was the work of a moment to cover her golden head and white neck with her favorite blue-and-white shawl; then passing quickly through one of the side doors, she was soon in the lime-avenue.

Quick as she had been, he was there before her.

"My darling," he cried, "we have but five minutes. I want to tell you how much I love you, and to ask you if you will be my wife?"

He drew her to him, and clasped his arms around her; he seemed as though he had no patience to wait until the words fell from her lips. He said over and over again:

"I love you, my darling; I want to give all my life to you. I will love you until I die. Say you will be my wife, sweet."

She raised her head from his breast, and looked at him.

"Do you really wish me to be your wife?" she asked in trembling, loving wonder.

"More than that," he replied, kissing her sweet lips. "I pray you to be my wife; and I swear that, if you refuse, I shall not care to live another moment. Do you love me, Hyacinth?"

"Yes," she whispered.

"Will you be my wife?" he asked; and her answer, but one word, was sweet as the sweetest of a summer wind over a bed of lilies.

Then followed for them a few minutes that were like minutes passed in Elysium.

CHAPTER VIII.

It was all settled, to the intense delight of the whole country-side. Alan Branston, the young squire of Elmsthorpe Grange, was to marry Hyacinth Vane, the daughter of the silent solitary man whose heart had been broken by his wife's death. The ladies of the country who would have been pleased to have secured the prize for their own daughters, said it was a very fortunate thing for Miss Vane, but that they had yet to see how it would end. True, Miss Vane was a lady, but there was a vast difference between the position of the two. Alan Branston was a wealthy squire. Hyacinth Vane, although her father was both a gentleman and scholar, had no fortune—had nothing, in short, but her beautiful face for her dowry. Yet, although worldly matrons shrugged their shoulders, the world in general smiled and approved.

Lady Rosedene was delighted. No engagement had ever given her half such satisfaction; it was the most fortunate thing that had ever happened. She smiled with the blandest satisfaction as she thought how people would talk about Lady Rosedene and her wonderful social tact. She had never been so pleased.

When Hyacinth, with flushed face and beating heart had gone to her own room, Alan went bravely to Lady Rosedene and told his story.

"I shall go to see Mr. Vane to-morrow," he said, "and in the meantime I wished to tell you."

She was so delighted that she almost embraced him on the spot.

"I cannot tell you how pleased I am," said her ladyship. "I have seen few whom I thought worthy of Hyacinth Vane. You have chosen wisely, Mr. Branston, and you will never repent your choice."

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

"Hyacinth," said the young lover, "I am going over to Dunwold this morning to see your father—you know what about."

She flushed crimson, even to the tips of her pretty ears.

"About me?" she questioned shyly.

"Yes, about you, my darling. I must tell him that you have promised to be my wife."

He smiled at the serious fashion in which she folded her hands and said quietly:

"I am quite sure that my father will not be willing for me to be married, Alan. He will say I am too young."

"We will persuade him that he is wrong," laughed Alan. "What can a father do against two lovers? You will see how quickly we shall induce him to change his mind."

It was something of a surprise to the solitary student, poring over his books, when the handsome young lover was announced, and suddenly entered his studio; he seemed to bring the fresh air and sunlight of the outer world with him. Francis Vane could not believe that somebody wanted to marry Elsie's child, that the little golden-haired Hyacinth, whom, in his own deadened mind, he had always associated with the beautiful white flowers, should be loved and asked in marriage. It was too wonderful. He looked at the bright face of the young lover.

"Hyacinth is a child," he said, "quite a child. I understand that you are Squire Branston, of Elmsthorpe Grange—that you are rich. But my Hyacinth is a child—quite a child."

"I beg your pardon," returned Alan; "she may be in some things a child, but she has the love, the soul, the beauty of a woman."

"Marry Hyacinth?" interrogated the scholar, musingly. "What would her mother say?"

And then Alan was silent for a short time; he was accustomed to appeals made to the living, but not to the dead. In a low, gentle voice, that won for him the love of Francis Vane, he answered:

"I am sure her mother's wish would be that her daughter should be blessed with the love of a loving young husband, as she herself was."

"But the child is so young," said Francis Vane.

"It is a fault that every day will amend," laughed the happy young lover. "Come, sir, every bird has its mate. Be good to us, and give your consent."

"True, true," said the unworldly, single-minded gentleman. "I loved her mother, and I married her. She seemed to me part of the sweet summer evening as she came walking through the soft shadows. The gray, calm evenings bring her back, and I see her walking in them still."

The startled look on Alan's face recalled him to himself.

"So you want to marry Hyacinth?" he resumed. "What does the child say? She was a child when she left me, and had no thought more serious than one about a bow of ribbon or a flower in her hair. And you tell me that in this short time she has grown from a child into a woman? What does she say?"

"She is here, sir," said the young lover. "I brought her with Lady Rosedene. I wished to see you alone before you saw them. Lady Rosedene has driven on into the village, but Hyacinth is in the garden. Shall I bring her to you?"

A wonderful light came over the scholar's worn, gentle face when he saw the young girl enter the room. She went up to him quickly, and kissed his face, hid her own in his breast.

With his hands he raised it in all its blushing loveliness. He held it up to the light, and looked at it with keen, tender eyes.

"My darling," he said, "I see it is true. You left me a child, you have returned a woman. A woman's love shines in those dear eyes and trembles on those pretty lips. Is it true you love him, Hyacinth—this bonny young lover of yours?"

"I do not want to leave you, father," she replied; and both gentlemen smiled at the naive admission made in those words.

"Do you love this gentleman who wishes to marry you, Hyacinth?" he asked, gently, and smiled again half sadly as he saw the red flush mounting even to her hair.

"Yes, I love him," was the quiet answer, and then Francis Vane was silent.

"You see, sir, that it is as I said. I will take the greatest care of Hyacinth. I will not take her away from you. I will be a son to you myself."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

The largest tunnel in the world is nearly completed through the Cascade mountains west of Kalispel. It is the pet scheme of J. J. Hill, president of the Great Northern road, and will save the road twelve miles and several hours in the transcontinental run. By next January, Great Northern trains will pass under theCascades instead of winding and backing over them. There are now seven switchbacks over the mountains, which the tunnel will wipe out.

Eight years ago Mr. Hill put engineers in the field for the final reconnoissance of this tunnel. When he announced his plans, railroad men laughed and said it would bankrupt the road. It is however being built almost entirely from the surplus revenues of the road, largely from those of the Montana Central branch. The work since Jan. 1, 1897 has been entirely paid for by earnings above dividends. More than two miles is completed, and only a third of a mile remains. Almost 1,000 men are at work with the latest and most powerful appliances. The sum paid for labor up to date is nearly $3,000,000 and the tunnel will cost more than $4,000,000.

Aside from the time and distance saved the tunnel will avoid the difficulty of keeping open for more than seven months of each year passes where snow often falls to an extraordinary depth. Transcontinental freight will be carried more cheaply, and it is transcontinental freight, destined for the Orient, that Mr. Hill looks for the future of his system. He is shaping his affairs to the end that he can carry freight from any part of the eastern United States to the Orient at the lowest possible cost, and he is quoted as saying when he recently came back after an inspection of the tunnel, that in ten years the traffic for China would require a double track from Duluth to Seattle.

His road is now receiving steel rails and other exports brought from the Atlantic tidewater to the lakes at Buffalo, and thence by his ships to Duluth consigned for Honolulu and Nagasaki. With the construction of the freighters building at New London, Conn. and new and larger freighters for the lakes, together with the new tunnel, a still lower rate will be made. The new lake freight ships will soon be built.

The Gazette desires to corret an error that occurred through no fault of ours, certainly with no intent of ur fairness on our part—we refer to the report to the effect that the Democrats made no nominations for county commissioners. The error occurred from the fact that the official minutes of the county convention did not show such nominations to have been made. Desiring to be absolutely certain that our report would be corret, we were not satisfied by trusting to these minutes, but made special inquiries of the secretary of the county committee, who informed us that no nominations were made. M. Coad, of this city, one of our pioneers, and Chas. Robeckke, one of the best citizens of Thief River Falls, were the nominees. curiously enough, the name ofWm.C.L.Demann was also omitted from the list of nominees. He has served as commissioner of the district for the past four years, and has been unanimously nominated by the Republicans to succeed himself. They are all good men, and we trust they will accept this apoloy.

Special trains will run from all points in the Valley on Saturday, Seyt. 26, when Bryan will speak. As to Red Lake Falls, practically the entire city will be there.

IMPORTANT LAND DECISION

Several Thousand Acres in the Vicinity of Duluth Affected.

DULUTH, Sept. 17.—A very important ruling has been received at the local land office from the general commissioner which affects several thousand acres of valuable land in the Duluth district and is a victory for the Northern Pacific Railroad company over other claimants. The ruling is one of the outcomes of a recent decision of the federal supreme court, which held that the Eastern terminal of the Northern Pacific is Ashland instead of Duluth. Register Culkin says that there are perhaps 75 other filings in the local office affected by the decision.

EARLIEST IN SOME YEARS

Heavy Frost Reported Along the Mississippi Valley.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 18.—The first heavy frost of the season along the Mississippi valley is reported. It was quite general, and in some instances it was a killing. The temperature fell from 80 degrees to 40 in two days. The sudden change is quite remarkable, the first frost coming earlier this year than it has for some years.

Along the Southern Minnesota division of the Milwaukee road a heavy frost is also reported.

Minnesota Man Killed.

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 18.—Edward Morse, formerly of Redwood, Minn., who has just returned from Nome, was shot and instantly killed by Policeman Fred A. Ribbach. Ribbach found Morse and two comrades attempting to commit burglary and attempted to arrest them. A pitched battle with revolvers ensued, 20 shots being fired.

Robbed the Safe of $420.

BLUE EARTH, Minn., Sept. 17.—The safe of the Iowa and Minnesota division of the Chicago and Northwestern was broken open here and $420 and about all the tickets in the office were stolen. The thieves entered through the freight door transom and raised the ticket office window.

Receivers Ask to Be Discharged.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 13.—The receivers for the Walter A. Wood Harvester company have asked that they be discharged. All of the claims against the company, amounting to about $1,265,000, have been paid, and there is still on hand a cash surplus of $48,441.

Democrats Name a Candidate.

ROCHESTER, Minn., Sept. 12.—Attorney I. L. Brown of Winona has been nominated for congress by the Democrats of the First congressional district. There was no other candidate and the nomination was made by acclamation.

Northwestern Flour Output.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 13.—According to The Northwestern Miller the flour output at Minneapolis last week was 288,470 barrels, against 274,160 barrels for the corresponding week of 1899. Superior and Duluth mills ground 8,680 last week, against 40,435 for the corresponding week of 1899. Though the majority of millers complained about business being dull last week, on an average sales of flour were not greatly under the production.

NORTH DAKOTA HANGINSS.

Condemned Murderers Executed at Bismarck and Minot.

BISMARCK, N. D., Sept. 17.—With a declaration of innocence on his lips, with nearly his last words a curse, and with a signed statement of his guilt in his pocket that was taken from his person after he was dead, Ira O. Jenkins went to the scaffold and died without a quiver or sign of fear. Jenkins' crime was the murder of August Stark, at a coal mine north of Bismarck last spring.

MINOT, N. D., Sept. 17.—Hans Thorpe was hanged here for murder. Efforts were made to prove his insanity but without avail.

BURGLARS INTERRUPTED.

They Cover Their Retreat With a Shower of Bullets.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Sept. 18.—At an early hour Sunday morning an attempt was made to blow open the safe of the Wilton (Wis.) bank, by three desperate men, but it was frustrated in a nick of time by three citizens, who were passing near and heard the explosion. They hastened to the bank and as soon as their presence became known the robbers began making their escape. A running fight ensued between the robbers and the citizens, several shots being exchanged.

KICKED UP A BIG SEA.

Gale on Lake Michigan Does Considerable Damage at Racine.

RACINE, Wis., Sept. 17.—The southeast gale on Lake Michigan kicked up a big sea and caused the waves to run into the harbor and through the docks being built on the north side, washing away many tons of sand. One hundred feet of sidetrack of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road was undermined and fell into the river and a large oil house was undermined. In order to save it a breastworks, 300 feet, were built, and hundreds of bags of sand filled in.

Hills Man Strikes It Rich.

RAPID CITY, S. D., Sept. 14.—Word has been received from John Leedy, formerly of this city, that he is making from $1,200 to $1,500 per day from some lease that he has on ground on Anvil creek at Cape Nome. He will clean up something like $50,000 for the season's work. Had there been plenty of water, he would have made a great deal more.

Lands For Colonists.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Sept. 13.—A big deal in land has been consummated here. The Lake Lumber company disposed of 45,000 acres of land in Washburn and Sawyer counties to an Iowa syndicate. The lands are unimproved and it is the intention of the syndicate to offer them to colonies. The consideration was $57,000.

GETTING A FILIPINO.

An Incident of the Advance In Which Major Logan Was Killed.

The Thirty-third, the regiment "what shoots," had been ordered to march from San Fabian to Magaldan. On the way it was to look in at San Jacinto and report on what it found there.

Two miles and a half from the town insurgents were found intrenched in the woods. Major Logan's battalion had rushed forward, and for a few minutes the fight was stubborn and hot. Then the insurgents began to fall back.

Five of the Americans lay dead on the road in front of the trenches which the insurgents had hastily thrown across it. Major Logan was dying in the little nipa shack which was used as a field hospital. The wave of battle was receding, but sharpshooters were still potting the hospital.

A white flag bearing the Red Cross signal was stuck up in the yard where the dead and wounded Americans lay. A jocular insurgent shot the bamboo staff squarely in two.

No troops had been left as a hospital guard and Major Lieberman stalked among his wounded men with a revolver in one hand and a "first aid" package in the other.

As the stragglers who had fallen out of the column from exhaustion or because they had stuck fast in the mud, came up along the road Major Lieberman seized them. He impressed them into service in a provisional defence regiment, which he was forming as rapidly as possible.

"Here, you men," he would shout, "we need you here worse than they do at the front. Go over there in that bunch of bamboo and see if you can get that sharpshooter who is trying to kill these wounded men. Shoot his head off and I'll have you promoted."

Every man who could stand on his feet at all was put on the firing line, which the Major was rapidly throwing around the hospital. A man shot through the ankle volunteered for duty. He crawled out in the yard, and, with his rifle thrown across an old tree trunk, kept a vigilant watch on the row of bamboo off to the right.

Capt. Shields, who had been sent down the road with part of his company to see that the hospital was not being attacked in force, received the favorable consideration of a sharpshooter concealed somewhere close to him. One bullet brushed his hat. The next kicked up the dust just in front of him, and the third screamed past his ear. Capt. Shields paused. He was annoyed.

"If that fool doesn't quit that monkey business, he's liable to do me bodily injury," said the Captain slowly. "Now, here you," he said to some of his men, "see if you can find that feller. Don't kill him. Throw bricks at him. I want to catch him alive and have him stuffed."

"I know where he is."

It was the quick-eyed, alert Sherman Grant Hayes, the full-blooded Cherokee soldier, who spoke.

"Well, get him," replied the Captain.

The Cherokee's gun was aimed at the top of a high palm tree. Crack went his gun and an insurrecto plunged forward in the mass of leaves at the top of the tree and then fell downward a sheer forty feet.

"I wish I could have got the scoundrel alive," said the Captain sadly. "He was actually the worst shot with a rifle I ever saw."—Chicago Tribune.

The Persian Bastinada.

The bastinado is the favorite corporal punishment of Persia, and no one, however high in rank, from the Prime Minister downward, is exempt therefrom: all are liable to "get sticks." The culprit is first thrown on his back, his feet being looped to a pole held horizontally by a couple of ferrashes. A turn of the pole tightens the loops and brings the feet into position, soles upward. This done, a large bundle of supple willow wands about five feet to six feet long and an inch in diameter at the thickest part is produced, and three or four ferrashes seize a wand each, and at the word "bezan" (strike) from the head ferash (ferrash-bashi) they apply these, with more or less vigor, to the bare feet of the culprit. Stick after stick breaks over the feet or the pole, according to the extent of the bribe promised to the ferrash-bashi; the victim meanwhile crying out to Allah, and Mohammed, or cursing the cause of his ill luck.

A hundred sticks or thereabouts are generally used at the ordinary beating. These, as I have said, are broken over the feet or the pole, according to the amount of the bribe given. In cases where a goodly sum is forthcoming the punishment only causes the receiver a few days' tenderness; but a really severe beating, in which a great many more sticks are fairly broken over the victim's feet, will reduce the soles to a positively mangled state, and keep the man off his feet for months. Yet so great is the love of money among these people they invariably prefer to "get sticks" rather than to pay a fine. As a rule punishments in Persia are necessarily severe, because leniency on the part of the local Governors is misconstrued immediately into weakness.

Faffir Football Team.

The Orange Free State is opposing England in more fields than one, for hailing from this State there is now in England a Kaffir football team which has won for itself golden opinions from lovers of that sport in England. The team has been invited to visit Germany and Austria when its British tour is completed. It is mostly composed of natives of the Basuto tribe, though two are Hottentots. A game between this team and our Carlisle Indians would be a drawing card.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

TEXAS STORM NEWS.

It is estimated 500 lives were lost in the Texas storm outside of Galveston.

The fund for relief of the Galveston sufferers had reached $1,500,000 Saturday night.

The government suffered great financial loss by the destruction of fortifications at Galveston.

More than 2,000 dead bodies have been recovered and identified at Galveston and the estimate of Mayor Jones that 5,000 souls perished in Saturday's great hurricane does not appear to be magnified.

As a result of the terrible mutilation of bodies at Galveston by vandals 25 negroes were shot by order of a court-martial. Their pockets were found to be full of human fingers and jewelry of which the dead were stripped.

The Houston Post prints a list of 2,700 names of the Galveston dead, compiled from various sources, but believed to be authentic. Hundreds of others were buried at sea and along the beach and many are still in the ruins. Taking all things into consideration, there seems no longer any doubt that the number of dead will reach beyond the estimates of 5,000 which have been made by Mayor Jones and other reliable citizens of Galveston.

The following statement of the conditions at Galveston and an appeal for aid has been issued by the local relief committee: "A conservative estimate of the loss of life is that it will reach 5,000. At least 5,000 families are homeless and wholly destitute. The entire remainder of the population is suffering in greater or less degree. Not a single church, school or charitable institution, of which Galveston has so many, is left intact. Not a building escaped damage and half the whole number were entirely obliterated. There is immediate need of food, clothing and household goods of all kinds."

THE CRISIS IN CHINA.

Li Hung Chang has left Shanghai for Peking.

France has formally agreed to the Russian proposal to withdraw from Peking to Tien Tsin.

Russia's intention of maintaining a large military force in China is regarded with suspicion in Germany.

It is estimated that from 15,000 to 20,000 native Christians were killed in the northern provinces of China during July.

The allied forces under General Dorward captured Tu Lin without firing a shot. The town was thoroughly looted and then burned.

American troops in China had an exciting engagement with 2,000 Boxers at Mo Tai. The Chinese were routed, leaving 200 dead.

The empress dowager and emperor, with 8,000 troops as a guard, are now staying with a Mongol prince in Mongolia, 150 miles northwest of Peking.

A Shanghai dispatch says the Boxers, united with the Society of the Big Knife, are reported to have defeated the imperial troops north of the province of Kiung-Su, which is south of Shantung.

The crisis that was near at hand over the evacuation proposal of the Russian government has been averted for a time at least, and the diplomatic side of the matter has become again the object of attention.

The Chinese minister has received from the state department a favorable response to his application for exemption from interference by this government to Li Hung Chang on his journey from Shanghai to Peking.

Russia insists that the emperor of China shall return and assume full direction of governmental affairs, entirely displacing the empress dowager, and that Prince Tuan shall be punished for his part in the recent trouble.

Great Britain and Germany have declined to evacuate Peking, and Austria and Italy have decided to be guided by Germany's decision. The others have agreed to a more or less modified withdrawal, as defining the attitude of the powers.

Instructions have been sent to Major General Chaffee, commanding the American forces in Peking, not to agree to any solution of the Peking situation which does not include the safety of the native Christians there, who are under protection of the American missions.

FOREIGN NEWS.

An imperial decree has been issued at Vienna admitting women to practice as physicians and surgeons on the same conditions as men.

King Victor Emanuel III of Italy, has announced his intention of giving up 4,000,000 lira ($772,000) of his civil list to make possible a reduction of the salt tax.

King Oscar has accepted the resignation of the premier, Erik Gustaf Boestrom, for reasons of health, and has appointed Admiral Fredrick Wilhelm von Otter to be his successor.

The Portuguese transport Benguellor has sailed from Lisbon for Lourenso Marques with 1,200 troops, presumably to protect the Portuguese frontier. It is rumored that other troops will follow.

The president of France's decision in the boundary dispute between Colombia and Costa Rica is largely in favor of Costa Rica. It is important to America because it places the mouth of the projected Nicaraguan canal in Nicaraguan territory.

Caetano Longo, on returning from the United States to Pastona, Italy, killed his wife in a fit of jealousy and then two men of whom he was jealous. Having committed the triple crime, he ran amuck, killing five others and wounding two fatally. Then he went to the local cemetery and committed suicide.

REAL ESTATE VALUES

LARGE INCREASE IN MINNESOTA ASSESSMENTS THIS YEAR.

Sale of the Duluth Road to the Northern Pacific Legal—Mines on the Mesaba Flooded — Important Land Decision. Earliest Killing Frost in Years—State News in General.

St. Paul, Sept. 18.—Returns to the state board of equalization show that throughout the state the value of real property is largely increased. At the time of the assessment two years ago Minnesota real property was equalized at $475,070,349. The total value of land, exclusive of structures, was placed at $218,200,008. This year the returns of the various county boards show the state's real property at the tremendous aggregate of $502,273,043, more than half a billion of dollars. The total value of Minnesota lands, without the structures, is placed at $224,613,056. The average value of state lands is $7.00 an acre.

Structures upon real property in the state, exclusive of those upon town or city lots, represent a value of $28,322,908, which is an increase of $1,717,913 over that of two years ago. Structures on town and city lots are valued at $147,537,433.

MINES ARE FLOODED.

Heavy Rains Cause Much Trouble on Mesaba Range.

Duluth, Sept. 14.—There was a severe washout on the Duluth and Iron Range road near Allen Junction as well as some lesser ones at other points along the line. Other roads in this part of the country have also suffered seriously, and trains have been regularly late for two days. The Northern Pacific has suffered worst of here.

The downfall of rain has been tremendous, and has injured mines as badly as roads. All the open pit mines of the Mesaba range have been flooded, and are now idle. There are lakes in the open pits of the Duluth, Oliver, Mountain Iron, Mahoning, Fayal, Auburn, Hale and Biwabik mines, and several of them are suffering from the drowning of their pumps, so that the work of getting out the water will be slow and tedious.

Towne Speaks at Spokane.

Spokane, Wash., Sept. 18.—Charles A. Towne and Senator Allen of Nebraska opened the campaign for the Democracy here. They spoke in a large tent to an audience of 3,000. Mr. Towne held the platform for three hours, was in good voice and kept his audience in high spirits with his wit and humor.

Railroad Surveyors Called In.

Grantsburg, Wis., Sept. 14.—The big crew of surveyors that the Northern Pacific have had working east of here has been called in. They ran lines out in the neighborhood of Clam Falls, some 22 miles from here, and were coming back, locating the road.

HOW REPTILES TRAVEL

As Stowaways on Vessels From Tropical Countries.

Countries that trade with all parts of the world receive at times unbidden guests, some of which succeed in making good their footing, and acquire the style and title of natives. Cockroaches are among these uninvited immigrants. Now and then a really formidable visitor enters a country unchallenged. One such intruder found safe and permanent quarters in the reptile house of the Zoological Gardens in London. Mr. Bartlett used to tell the story with glee. One day a sailor called at the office and asked for the superintendent. Upon being questioned, he explained that he had found "a sarpint" in the hold of a ship that was lying in one of the London docks after the voyage home from India. The sailor had brought the stranger to the gardens as the most likely place at which to dispose of it. "There's a beauty for you!" he said, opening the mouth of the rice sack he held in his hand. Mr. Bartlett looked, and saw, to his amazement, a magnificent cobra, with hood expanded, apparently ready to strike. The sailor hastily closed the bag, while Mr. Bartlett fetched a bell glass, into which the snake was put until it could be transferred to a cage. The sailor spoke of another and larger snake that he had seen in the hold. This he hoped to catch if he could find a customer. Mr. Bartlett promised to buy it, and gave the man some much needed advice about the handling of snakes. Perhaps the advice made him too cautious. At any rate the other dangerous visitor to English shores did not find its way to the gardens. For the sake of the sailors it is to be hoped that it did not put to sea in the hold. There is a well-authenticated story of a Liverpool fruiterer, who received a crate of melons—together with a snake. When the crate was unpacked, the head of a fine Southern viper was seen protruding from the straw at the top. The snake was coaxed into a bottle by the aid of a stick, and was transferred to a museum. Lizards are pretty creatures, but it is not an altogether pleasant experience to find one squatting between the layers as one cuts a banana from the bunch. Such cases are recorded on unimpeachable authority. It is a little harder than usual to account for the lizard recently found in an American register-till by a London merchant, and by him presented to the Zoological Society. There is no possible doubt that the lizard belongs to a species that has its home in Western Africa and the Canaries. How it got to America and found its way into the till, to be therein imported into England—as the finder believes was the case—will never be known.

The farmers of Emardville want to see J. T. Knight reelected for Judge of Probate. He is the "Father of Red Lake county" and deserves this recognition, as he has made a splendid officer.

A peddler drove around among the farmers last week, he had a very poor trade and told some of them that this was both his first and last trip to this country, we are not sorry Mr. Peddler but wish you good bye and god speed.

The emergency bag sent by a church society to a Kansas soldier in the Philippines contained among the necessities a box of DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, the well known cure for piles, injuries and skin diseases. The ladies took care to obtain the original DeWitt's Witch Hazel Save knowing that all the counterfeits are worthless. W. A. Schreiter.

Farmers begin to feel a little uneasy because all that rain put a stop to plowing, and also ruined almost all the hay, meadows are too wet to think of making any more hay for a while. Some of the grain stacks also begin to suffer, wheat being so damp that it is almost impossible to thresh.

The progessive nations of the world are the great food consuming nations. Good food well digested gives strength, If you cannot digest all you eat, you need Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It digests what you eat. You need not diet yourself. It contains all of the digestants combined with the best known tonics and reconstructives. It will even digest all class of food in a bottle. No other preperation will do this. It instantly relieves and quickly cures all stomach troubles. W. A. Schreiter.

Terrebonne.

Farmers have very contrary weather for threshing.

Thomas Barnier left last Friday to take his abode at St. Joseph, Stearns Co., Minn.

Jack Frost is expected within this month, though people do not intend to give him a hearty welcome and he knows it, too.

A good many people from here went to Lambert last Sunday afternoon, to attend the christening of a new bell for that properous parish.

Father Roy made a very impressive allocution in which his oratorical knowledge was admired. Dr. Tessier sang a "Quam Dilecta" which was very much appreciated.

There were two splendid social parties this week, one at Leon Laurent's and the other at John Clement's on account of the visit of Rev. Fr. Clement of Massachusetts. The Rev. Fr. is a brother of Mrs Leon Laurent.

Large sun spots, astronomers say, caused the extreme heat this summer, and doctors declare nearly all the prostrations were induced by disorders of the stomach. Good health follows good digestion, Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests what you eat. If you have indigestion or dyspepsia it will quickly relieve and permanently cure you. W. A Schreiter.

Wanted.—A first class female cook at the Palace Hotel. Good wages for the right party.

The most dainty and effective pills made are DeWitt's Little Early Risers. They are unequaled for all liver and bowel troubles. Never gripe. W. A. Schreiter.

Nearly all the people in this vicinity were laid up with summer complaint.

Carl Gerlach has threshed 1428 bushels of wheat. Average yield was 15 bus. per acre.

Hilltop is a good wheat country; eight carlords of wheat have been shipped from here already.

DeWitt's Little Early Risers are prompt, paintable, pleasant, powerful, purifying little pills. W. A. Schreiter.

The people are all talking election and will all cast a vote for Bryan, and J. T. Knight is the man for judge of probate.

Flee into the desert of forgotten things, thou foul substitute. Thou hast become a blot upon the world's happiness. Genuine Rocky Mountain Tea made by the Madison Medicine Co. Ask your druggist.

A new fakir is abroad in the rural regions. He drives through the country and sells soap at $5 a box, which sum includes the price of forty yards of carpet selected from samples which he has in his wagon. He takes the $5, leaves the soap, promises to deliver the carpet of the selected sample within a week, and drives away. The soap is probably worth 50 cents. It stays with the purchaser. The carpet is probably worth $15 and stays with the fakir and has not yet been delivered to a single victim. Farm families should be on guard against this new fakir.

HOI FOR CROOKSTON.

Bryan the Magnet to Attract Thousands.

The Bryan meeting at Crookston on Saturday, the 29th, will doubtless be the biggest political gathering in the history of the Red River Valley. Special trains on all branches running into Crookston, will congregate a multitude which will run up into the tens of thousands. The Great Northern will run a special for the accommodation of Red Lake county people, leaving this city at 11:45 A. M. and returning at 10:45 P. M. at $1.20 for the round trip.

Mr. Bryan is received at East Grand Forks after his North Dakota engagment, closing at Grand Forks, and goes to Crookston for an early evening meeting Saturday, Sept. 29.

The state central committee, chairmen of the county committees and the state candidates upon the Fusion ticket are all expected to be at the Crookston meeting and as many of them as possible go thence with Mr. Bryan to Duluth. This will be by the regular Northern Pacific night train, which will be held until 9 o'clock to accommodate the Crookston meeting. The party will arrive in Duluth Sunday morning. Mr. Bryan rests throughout the day.

The special train for Mr. Bryan's party will leave Duluth on the Northern Pacific railroad at 11 a. m. Monday, October 1.

Democratic Legislative Convention.

The day was dark and dreary, and the rain was never weary, but this did not prevent the Democrats from holding a rousing legislative convention at St. Halaire, Monday afternoon, at which a dozen or more delegates participated. W. T. Spillane, of this city, was made chairman of the convention, and E. M. Hoff, of St. Halaire, secretary. The name of Jas. Meehan, of Thief River Falls, was the only one presented to the convention and the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the convention for him. With the launching of the Democratic nominee, there are three candidates for legislative honors in the 61st district, which comprises Beltrami and Red Lake counties. Mr. Meehan is a resident of Thief River Falls, where he has been identified for the past eight years with the lumber interests of the firm of P. & J. Meehan, and his acquaintance is widespread. He was formerly a resident of Red Lake Falls.

Mr. Meehan looks to the lumber interests of the district, which, as is well known, are extensive, to come to his aid in this contest. The nomees now before the people are:

Populist, S. A. Swanson, of Red Lake Falls.

Republican, C. G. Rapp, of St. Hilaire.

Democrat, Jas. Meehan Jr., of Thief River Falls.

A Sporty Boy.

That Joe Orth is a sport of no small degree is proven by the way he can catch fish. One day last week Joe got one of his fishy spells. After inquiring as to whether there were any game fish in the rivers here, and being informed that there were all kinds of "muskalung," pickerel, pike, bass and sturgeon, he expresses his determination to go after them, gets his tackle ready and goes over to the Falls Meat Market for beefstake, for bait. Think of it—beefstake for game fish! Never heard of before in the history of all fishing. Minnows, frog's legs, flies, and spoon hook, all passed up for beefsteak—and to catch game fish! But he succeeded in spite of the bait, in catching a fine pickerel, which he had baked and served with a flourish, at the Palace, and lost a "muskalung," hook, beefsteak, line and all. He says he can give the old time fishermen cards and spades and then beat them out.

Big Pay Roll.

Friday and Saturday of last week was pay day on the Great Northern. Agent Thomas distributed 66 checks among the boys, mostly local workmen, aggregating over $1700 for work on the road during last month. The heavy rains causing the slide outs in the cuts in this city account largely for this showing, and Mr. Thomas says that the pay roll this month exceeds even these large figures. While the trains are able to run in to the depot regularly, there is a sufficient movement in the cuts to necessitate the regular employment of a large gang.

P. O. HAGGLUND, County Surveyor.

P. O. Hagglund has been county surveyor of Red Lake county for two terms. Upon the organization of the county he was appointed to the position by the board of county commissioners. Two years ago he was nominated by the Populists and elected by a handsome majority. This year he is again on the Populist ticket, and if the voters of the county want a good, clean, sober, efficient surveyor, they will re-elect him. He has a fine set of instruments, and has for the past two years done his own surveying. Wisely, when it comes to technical engineering, he secures expert assistance, and in this way gives the best possible service. Mr. Hagglund is one of the pioneers of this section, coming to River Falls nineteen years ago, where he took up a homestead. He has always been a public spirited citizen, and conceived the idea of the Sanders-Black river drainage ditch, and at great labor and expense, succeeded in pushing it through, giving seventy-five dollars toward the expenses out of his own pocket. The Gazette does not support Mr. Hagglund in a partisan sense. But we believe that, under the circumstances, the people should take advantage of the opportunity of electing a reliable man, who is worthy the support of all good citizens.

High School Notes.

Edited by

Eleanor Findeisen, Catherine Pirath and Pauline Nieland.

THE RIVER OF LIFE.

Onward gliding,
Cupid at the helm;
Down the the river riding,
In the lighted realm.

Onward, whither going?
Dost thou know it well?
Now fair skies are glowing,
Soon comes a signal.

Scan thou the horizon,
See the coming storm;
Cupid wilt the boat shun,
Leave thee drift forlorn.

Where wilt thou be landing—
In the lighted Zone,
Or in the dark pit standing
To thy fate bemoan?

At a meeting of the High School Organization held in the High School building Tuesday morning the following committees were appointed: Entertainment, Norman Schreiter, Maud Findeisen, Drew Marshall, Ernest Fletcher and Bessie Hunt; reporting committees, for the Courier, Edward Paul, Ned Taylor, and Scott Hall; for The Gazette, Eleonor Findeisen, Katherine Pirath, and Pauline Nieland; a Lookout committee, consisting of Fred Richard, Elizabeth McNerthney, Joseph Helm, Lulu Fletcher, and Anton Schusser; a decorating committe, consisting of Delia Toupin, Orilla Hennemuth, Willie Hunt, Hugo Zaiser and Eva Marchildon.

The yell of the High Scool Organization, which was chosen, is Boom-a-lacka, boom-a-lacke, bow, wow, wow! Check-a-lacka, check-a-jack, chow, chow, chow! Ricker, Racker, Fire Cracker, Zip, Boom, Bah! Red Lake Falls High School, Rah, rah, rah!!

A meeting of the High School Organization will be held at the home of Mrs. Spillane, Friday evening, Sept. 28.

The Junior Class Club held a meeting Monday and decided to give a Social for the benefit of the School Improvement Fund, at the city hall. Light refreshments will be served. Date to be anounced later.

Every body come and help us in our earnest efforts.

The sophomores have decided upon their colors, which are gray and rose. Their class yell is as follows: Ricketty Zep! Bis! Boom! Be! Red Lake Falls High School 1903!

William and Bessie Hunt were absent during the week on account of William's sickness.

Miss Benedict was obliged to dismiss her room Monday on account of her illness, but resumed her work Tuesday morning.

Marjorie Rodgers was absent during the week on account of sickness at home.

Ice Cream Sociable.

The ladies of Joan of Arc Court, W. C. O. F., gave an ice cream sociable last night, and although the weather was pretty frigid, great crowds came and it was a success in every way. A musical program added to the enjoyment of the event. The proceeds were $35. A. M. Anderson kindly loaned the new Irving piano, which he has in stock and for sale, and the band rendering several of their best selections swelled the tide of harmony.

JEWISH NEW YEAR.

Which Has Just Been Celebrated at Grand Forks.

Sunday evening was the beginning of the Jewish New Year 5661 and was celebrated in Grand Forks by those of that faith in strict accord with all the ancient custom, the ceremonies being conducted in the Jewish synagogue by Rabbi Papermaister. The services have been largely attended, nearly all of the 300 members being present. The first service was held Sunday evening. Monday's services commenced at 6:30 a. m and closed at 1 p. m., with an evening service from 5:30 to 8:30. At the last service Senator Hansborough delivered an address, in which he spoke of the prominent part in the world's history that had been played by the Jews, and of their patriotism and promptness in responding to the country's call for volunteers. Next week Tuesday the "Day of Atonement" will be observed. The first service will be held Tuesday evening at 6:30 and from that time till 6:30 Wednesday evening, according to a custom that has always been followed, nothing in the shape of food, not even a glass of water, will pass the lips of any of the members of the congregation.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Horovitz and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Stern, of this city, attended the celebration.

Terrebonne Ditch.

The survey for the Terrebonne ditch will be made within a few days. The object is to open up a channel through Badger Creek and continue the same for six or seven miles. The Terrebonne district is one of the richest sections of Red Lake County, and the improvements in the conditions that will come as a result of this ditch will make it one of the garden spots of the Red River Valley. Already there are many farmers there who are now in a position to accommodate their less fortunate brethren with loans, and with the increase in the value of lands that has come with the past year many of them are rich. Geo. A. Ralph will survey the Terrebonne ditch.

RED LAKE FALLS, MINN

NEWS OF THE WEEK

THE CRISIS IN CHINA.

Li Hung Chang has arrived at Tien-Tsin.

Military operations outside of Peking have been resumed.

Li Hung Chang arrived at Taku Sept. 16 and proceeded at once to Peking.

The governor of the province of Chili has ordered the extermination of the Boxers.

Li Hung Chang has issued an edict calling for the extermination of the Boxers.

The Anglo-American expedition against Boxers near Peking has been successful.

It is said that Commissioner Rockhill, now in Peking, will recommend the withdrawal of the American forces.

A Chinese imperial edict commands a cessation of hostile acts, restoration of peace and the inauguration of reforms.

Twenty-five Russians and Germans are reported to have been blown up by a mine during the capture of the Peitang forts.

Germany makes it a condition to conducting peace negotiations with China that the leaders of the recent outrages be delivered up.

The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger's Shanghai correspondent cables that the allies captured the Pei Tang and Lutai forts with great losses.

The German foreign office has received replies from Italy, Austria and France, agreeing, without reserve, to Germany's Chinese proposal.

Admiral Correjolles, the French commander in Chinese waters, in notifying the French government that the allies assaulted and captured the Chinese forts at Peitang, says the French participated in the engagement.

It is explained at the British foreign office that it is found inexpedient for the powers to accept the Russian withdrawal proposal as they had reliable information that the "Boxers were ready to reoccupy Peking as soon as the allies retired."

The taotai of Shanghai, who signed for the viceroys a friendly agreement with the foreign consuls, has been removed from office by an imperial edict. His successor is strongly anti-foreign, having urged the Chinese government to repudiate its foreign debt.

An imperial decree has been received at Peking announcing the arrival of the emperor and empress dowager at Tai Yuan Fu. The decree also commands the governor of Shensi province to raise money to build a palace at Hsian-Fu, as the new intended capital.

Mr. Conger, the United States minister, says that Peking must be occupied by foreign troops until some settlement is effected, as otherwise all the value of the expedition will be lost. General Chaffee has issued orders prohibiting the American troops from shooting from boats, looting or foraging.

The Washington government has made public the text of the notes to Germany, Russia and China. The American force will be materially reduced, but six more warships have been ordered to the Chinese station. Germany's proposal that guilty parties be punished preliminary to opening peace negotiations was rejected.

"Authentic accounts have been received here," says the Moscow correspondent of the London Standard, "of a horrible massacre at Blagovestchensk, which was undoubtedly carried out under direct orders from the Russian authorities and which then let loose the tide of slaughter through Amur. The entire Chinese population of 5,000 souls was massacred."

THE ANTHRACITE STRIKE.

It now begins to look as if the coal miners' strike would extend to the railroaders, at least in the Scranton region.

The first bloodshed in the miners' strike occurred at Shenandoah Friday. A sheriff's posse fired on a crowd of riotous men, killing two persons and wounding seven others.

Reports received by President Mitchell show that 80 per cent of the mine workers of the Lehigh region are on strike. Large numbers are joining the ranks of the strikers daily.

Rioting has begun in the anthracite coal regions in Pennsylvania and an open conflict is expected. The strikers marched through several districts and by demonstrations of force made recruits.

Three regiments of infantry, a battery and a troop of cavalry have been ordered out by Governor Stone of Pennsylvania to assist Sheriff Toole in maintaining order in the Schuylkill mine region.

A few more mine workers continue to join the strikers' ranks. The temper of the mine owners on the question of arbitration, as indicated in interviews and statements, is very much against the proposition.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Netherlands budget for 1901 shows a deficit of 2,500,000 florins.

Twenty thousand French mayors were banqueted by the government at Paris Saturday.

A dispatch to the London Daily Mail from Calcutta says that 25 inches of rain was registered there in two days

At London, Olga Nethersole, the actress, was fined £2 for allowing two dogs to be imported from the United States without muzzles.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

Shipments of anthracite coal are rapidly diminishing as a result of the strike of miners.

The Pennsylvania coal strike has demoralized the lake coal carrying trade and has brought the season to a premature close.

POLICE OF VARIOUS PLACES.

Their Numerical Strength and Cost—The Test of Efficiency.

There are 6,400 New York policemen, a larger number than the force of any other city in the country, says the Sun, and a larger number by several hundred than the various divisions of the Greater New York had collectively before consolidation. There are 9,500 policemen in the city of Paris, the proportion of police to inhabitants being larger than it is in the city of London. There are 60,000 policemen in Great Britain. Of these, England has 41,332, Scotland, 4,744 Ireland, 12,165; Wales, 1,283; the Isle of Man, 52. Liverpool has 1,895; Glasgow, 1,320; Dublin, 1,[illegible], and Manchester, 1,028.

The number of policemen in the city of London in 16,443 according to the last official report, but the police district of London includes a large amount of outlying rural and suburban territory with a population of London proper which is 4,400,000. The London police district covers an area 12 miles by 15, with 7,000 miles of streets or roads and the duty of patrolling these accounts very largely for the extensive membership of the force when compared with that of most American cities.

Chicago has 3,750 policemen and the average number of arrests in a year amounts to 75,000, though during the period of the World's Fair it was considerably higher. Boston has 1,200 policemen. Baltimore, 900; St. Louis, 1,100; Philadelphia, 2,600; Cincinnati, 600; Cleveland, 450; Detroit, 550; Washington, 600; San Francisco, 300; Pittsburg, 500 and New Orleans, 320.

Among foreign cities Paris stands first in the number of policemen compared with the population; and Palermo, Italy, stands lowest with the smallest and least expensive police force. Capital cities, as a rule, require more police protection than other cities even of a larger population, for as the number of transients in a city increases, the demand for police service advances and the expenses of maintenance increase correspondingly. The test of efficiency in a police department is not the number of men engaged, but their capacity for making arrests of the right persons at the right time, and under conditions which will be most favorable to their discharge if innocent or their conviction if guilty. A recent report of the Chicago Chief of Police showed the number of arrests in that city for the crime of homicide to have been 125 within the period covered. Of these arrested, 3 were executed, 20 were sentenced to terms of imprisonment, 9 were sent to the reformatory at Pontiac, 17 were acquitted and 46 cases were still pending at the time of the report.

In New York the number of arrests in a year for felony amounts to about 1,600 by the detective bureau, and the number of convictions from such arrests is about 400. The number of arrests for homicide in a year—homicide or murder—is about 400, and the proportion of convictions is much larger than it is in the city of Chicago, which expends for its Police Department in a year about one-third of the sum paid by New York.

The expense of the Philadelphia Police Department is $3,100,000 a year, and the expense of the Boston Police Department is $1,550,000 or one-half the expense of the Philadelphia department. The present population of Boston is estimated at 550,000, and that of Philadelphia, 1,400,000. Relatively, therefore, the Boston Police Department is the more expensive of the two, and this apparent discrepancy is due to the fact that the number of transient visitors to Boston is considerably larger than the number into Philadelphia, regarded usually as a "home city," the duties of the Police Department of which are chiefly in the line of maintaining order. The expense of the New York Police Department for 1900 is $12,000,000, approximately, of which $10,700,000 is for police salaries, $300,000 for supplies and the balance for rentals and contingencies.

Pewter Again in Fashion.

There is a passion for pewter just now; pewter made into all the knickknackery that we have for the past few years been seeing in silver. There is about pewter a softness and pliability which make it a fascinating material with which to model, and, therefore, besides its use for small pieces, artists are working out some of their best designs in it. In fact, reduced figures from life and after the antique are being exhibited, along with those of bronze and plaster. Smaller pieces, happily within reach of many are bonbonieres, trays and ash receivers, mugs, plates and small figures. All of these are presented in innumerable shapes and designs.

Collectors of mugs are being made happy by this revival of the use of pewter, and little short of madness is about regarding the number and rarity of those seen at informal evening parties or at other times decorating the side walls of dining rooms. The plates also are mostly seen as wall decorations and produce a stunning effect when well hung against a brilliant background.

It is not difficult to keep these pewter ornaments clean. A good rubbing with chamois every fortnight is all that is necessary. It is not desirable for them to have the shining lustre of silver: the tones of pewter should be soft and gray.—Boston Herald.

Color of Liquid Air.

The color of pure liquid air is a beautiful pale blue. Before an Eastern college recently was exhibited two samples of liquid air in glass tubes; one was made from air which had been washed to purify it from dust, soot, carbonic acid and other impurities. This, when condensed, was a pale blue liquid; the other sample was made by condensing some of the air of the lecture room in which the audience was assembled, and was an opaque, blackish fluid, resembling soup in appearance. It would appear as if condensed samples of air might afford an easy means for comparing different kinds of contamination. It may be possible some day to supply the hospitals of tropical countries where the natural air supply is bad, and the necessity for a better one very pressing, with beautiful blue country air guaranteed absolutely pure. This can never be accomplished, however, until some means have been provided for transporting liquid air to considerable distances without enormous losses, caused by its return to its former state.—Exchange.

Indications That It May Occur During the Present Season.

THE DOLLAR.

History of a Term That Has Become Worldwide.

Our word dollar dates back to 1785, when a resolution was passed by congress which provided that it should be the unit of money of the United States. Another resolution was passed in 1785, August 5, providing that it should weigh 375.64 grains of pure silver. The mint was established in 1792, and then required to coin silver dollars containing 371.25 grains of pure silver. This was due to the influence of Alexander Hamilton. No dollars were coined until 1794, and then irregular. They are now worth $100 each. In 1794 the coinage of regular dollars began. Our coin was the adaptation of the Spanish milled dollar, a coin very popular wherever the Spaniards traveled. The coin was called "piastre," meaning a flat piece of metal; it is synonymous with piaster. It is supposed that the Spanish took the German "thaler" and called it by the name of "piaster." The word dollar is entered in Bailey's English Dictionary of 1745, and was used repeatedly by Shakespeare at the beginning of the seventeenth century, especially in Macbeth, II: 2, 62: "Till she disbursed $10,000 to our general use," and in "Tempest," II: 1, 17. The question where Shakespeare found the word dollar is answered by the fact that the Hanseatic towns maintained a great establishment called the Steel Yard in London. The Steel Yard merchants were mostly North Germans, who would call the German thaler as if it spelled "dah-ler." The same merchants originated the word sterling, an abbreviation of the word "esterling." As the Hanseatic trade was particularly brisk on the Baltic and in Russia, the standard coins of the Hanse merchants were called esterlings, and sterling came to mean something genuine and desirable. The world dollar is the English for thaler, the first of which was coined about 1485, and corresponds quite closely to our present American silver dollars. The word thaler means "coming from a dale or valley;" the first dollar having been coined in a Bohemian valley called Foachimlsthal. It was under Charles V., the emperor of Germany, King of Spain and Lord of Spanish America, that the German thaler became the coin of the world.—Golden Thoughts.

Pastoral Tribes.

Lake Kivu, which is some 150 miles west of Victoria, Nyanza, is very deep, and contains neither crocodile nor hippos, but there are enormous numbers of large otters, and the typical bird is the demoiselle crane. The whole surrounding country is packed with small hills, which appear to have been sprinkled out with a pepper pot till not a single one more could find room. The hills are covered with magnificent pasture, which affords grazing for the large herds of cattle owned by the Watsui. The people are known collectively as the Wskuando, and society is divided into two classes, the Watsui being the aristocrats. They are presumably the descendants of the great wave of Galins, that penetrated in remote ages as far as Tanganyika; they are a purely pastoral folk breeding a long-horned cattle, with which they live, preferring even slavery to separation from their beloved beasts.

Skipping the Rope as a Cure.

Skipping rope exercises for middle-aged gentlemen affected with "liver" or indigestion is the latest alleged medical fad to which the humorists of the press have directed their attention. The London correspondent of the Gazette asserts that this novel form of adult exercise is being used on rainy mornings as a substitute for the mile and a half run before breakfast, which has been prescribed by a west end physician as a remedy for that condition of the liver which in London is due to want of outdoor exercise and late hours, hard work and bad air. There are professional men and others who take their run in the park before breakfast every fine morning and who bless the good physician who discovered this simple way of restoring health. Its effects in some cases have been marvelous. By "run" is not meant a sharp walk, but actual running.—Birmingham Gazette.

A Female Fraud.

Marietta, Ga., Journal: A well dressed white woman, representing herself as Fitzhugh Lee's cousin, called at a well known colored woman's house, named Cokine, in this city, and stated that there was gold and silver buried on her premises and by furnishing her some gold and silver to melt and place in her mineral indicator she could locate the treasure. The colored woman only had $6 in silver and gave that to her to melt, and the white woman was to supply the gold to melt with it. She took the silver and went off to melt it and never returned, thus duping the colored woman with false promises.

The American Saddle Horse.

A good saddle horse nowadays must walk, trot, canter and gallop, says Ainslee's Magazine. These are all natural gaits to oll horses, so that any ordinarily active horse can be more or less perfected in them. But more was needed in the time of our great-grandfathers, when long journeys had to be made over roads which were not much better than trails. Then the amble was considered desirable, and later a much pleasanter gait, which is called the running-walk. The amble is a slow pace, a gait where the progression is secured by the feet on the same side moving forward at the same time.

The true art of life is to select wisely. In its largest meaning, a sense of fitness is the supreme grace. The survival of the fattest is marked by their choice of the fittest.—Ram's Horn.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER
—BY—
PHIL. A. KAUFER.

FOR JUDGE OF PROBATE, J. T. KNIGHT.

The people of Red Lake county will not forget J. T. Knight when casting their ballots for judge of probate. He has been in the office for nearly two years, and has made one of the best officers the county has had. No one is more entitled to the friendship and support of the people of Red Lake county, and they will rally to his standard regardless of party affiliations.

The people know that in his hands the office is perfectly safe, as he has been tried and not found wanting. He has attended strictly to business during his term of office, and given the matters under his consideration the attention their importance merited. He is well posted on the probate code, and uses this knowledge to protect the weak and do justice to the strong.

The people of Red Lake county have an opportunity to reward a man who deserves their friendship. At the critical moment, will they desert him? We think not.

We believe, after the ballots are counted, it will be known that our Red Lake county citizenship has nobly stood up for the "Father of Red Lake County," in a cause where partisanship is waived for the higher standard of friendship and gratitude.

During the month of August fewer charters for corporations were taken out than in any montn since January, 1889. The authorities say that not only are few new trusts coming into existence, but those already established are declining in value. Of thirty-three trust stocks, only one stands higher than it did a year ago. The declines in the other thirty two shares stand for a total loss of 167,000,000. Another factor in the regulation of the trust question is the incorporation of many small concerns. Since Jan. 1, 1900, the New York Journal of Commerce estimates that the total capital put into such small affairs must be about $700,000,000.

Remember the aim of the Club will be for the betterment of the financial status of every citizen of Red Lake Falls. You owe it as a duty to yourself to take part in the good work.

The Gazette is in receipt of a complimentary ticket to the Ninth Annual Fair, of the Thirteen Towns Fair Association, to be held at Fosston on Sept. 27, 28 and 29, that is, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. The Fosstonites always put up a very good fair, and despite the bad weather, we predict that this ninth effort will be better than its predecessors, which is saying much in favor of the fair. J. E. Campbell is president, and Dr. J. Warninger, secretary.

One of the speakers at the rally Saturday night, in his efforts to say something funny, made a bad break, and the fact was at once recognized and commented upon. It was indelicate, to say the least, to bring in the uncalled for allusion to the "postmistress of Red Lake Falls," although it was perfectly safe, inasmuch as the lady was not present. In justice to Mr. Daly, and in view of the fact that the indelicacy has by some been attributed to him, it is proper to state that the allusion was not made by him. Although our citizens do not all agree with the postmistress politically, they agree the administration could scarcely be more obliging and efficient. No patron has ever been denied the best attention and the most spontaneous courtesy in matters pertaining to the postoffice, and the energy and ability of the management has just been demonstrated in the establishment of the Star route, which is proving a great accommodation to patrons of the office. If there is a change in the national administration one will naturally follow in the postoffice, but no coarse and far-fetched allusions, such as the one in question, will aid in bringing it about.

A fire alarm was turned in Thursday night, fire having been discovered in the residence of Geo. Keshmichel, about 11 o'clock. It seems that the family retired at ten o'clock, and an hour later were awakened by the baby, who generally demands attention about that time. The fire, which originated by clothes dropping onto the hot stove from a line suspended over it, had communicated to the walls, which were of pine ceiling. The fire department responded, but Mr. Keshmichel had succeeded in extinguishing the flames before their arrival. The damage will not exceed a hundred dollars.

Albina and Ida Lemieux were taking a drive Sunday afternoon in the family phaeton, when one of the wheels came off at the Great Northern railroad crossing. The horse proceeded on a brisk spin around the block, while the young ladies were dumped out, by the action of the buggy in veering over at the wheelless point. The horse was stopped on its return, after having done considerable damage to the conveyance. The young ladies were not hurt.

Judge Watts has been called upon to pass upon a case that grew out of the building of the Northern Pacific road to Red Lake Falls a dozen years ago. The promoter of that scheme persuaded some of the townships in that portion of the county to vote bonds for the project, and among them was the township of Gervais, that has not, up to date, paid its bonds. The supervisors of that town now bring suit asking that County Auditor Zeh be restrained from levying a tax or paying any more interest upon the bonds. Judge Watts has granted the attorney for the bond holders until Oct. 6th, to file a complaint in intervention.

Dr. Smith of Crookston preformed an operation for a Mr. Kelly of Beltrami county, Minn., for the removal of a floating cartilage in his arm. In addition to a bone about the size of a walnut the surgeon found other ossifications numbering about 30, ranging in size from that of a grain of wheat to a large bean. There is nothing in medical history telling of such a case.

P. Krogseng of the Crystal Springs Bottling Works reports a steadily increasing outside market for Thief River Falls pop and soft drinks. The quality of goods put up here is so excellent that Crookston firms are ordering it, thus reversing the conditions of a few months ago when all our carbonated waters came from that place.—Press.

While it is not likely that official confirmation of the report can be had from the officials of the road or from Mr. Hill for some time, it is learned upon the best authority that it is Mr. Hill's purpose to immedately continue the line of the Eastern Minnesota from Deer River to the northern extremity of the Red Lake. The decision is, no doubt, occasioned by reason of the fact that the Northern Pacific is now extending its line north from Bemidji to the same territory. The point sought by Mr. Hill so far as known at the present time is sixty miles north and thirty miles to the west of Deer River. It is asserted in some quarters that the long looked for line from Duluth to Winnipeg may develop from the project in hand.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Commercial Club.

A meeting of business men was held at the court house last night to reorganize the Commercial Club. Dr. N. M. Watson was elected chairman, and A. P. Tonpin, secretary, of the meeting. Expressions were called for from those present, and all were in favor of proceeding with the reorganization. A committee was appointed to draft constitution and bylaws—Dr. N. M. Watson, J. A. Duffy, Ed. L. Healy, A. W. Wood and H. H. Zaiser, and adjournment was taken to next Monday night, at which time it is desirable that there be a full attendance.

OCTOBER 5TH.

The Date of the Firemen's Second Annual Ball Has Been Set as Above.

After considerable discussion, the date of holding the Second Annual Ball of the Red Lake Falls Fire Department, has been changed from the 4th to the 5th of October, as it was thought this would accommodate the largest number.

The committee on arrangements, Messrs. Otto Zaiser, F. Borchers and Jas. Ford, have appointed the following sub-committees: Door, Samual Gibeau, Moses Belair. Introduction, Jos. Sally, Milton Converse, Wilfred Lemieux. Floor, Otto Zaiser, Jas. Ford. Music, F. Borchers, Otto Zaiser Jas. Ford. Reception, H. F. Krueger, Frank Jeffers, F. A. Grady.

The ball will be held in the Opera house, which is amply roomy to accommodate the large gathering which is sure to assemble at this annual testimonial to our Fire Laddies.

The Daly Meeting.

Hon M. J. Daly, Populist-Democratic nominee for congress, made a tour of Red Lake county last week, speaking at Thief River Falls, St. Hilaire, and Red Lake Falls, and closing his work in the county Sunday, with meetings at Terrebonne and Lambert.

The meeting here was held at the court house, which was again, as in the Eddy rally, found to be entirely inadequate to accommodate the large crowds that attempted to gain admission. The sprinkling of ladies in the hall was even more marked than on the preceding event. Surrounding the speaker, on the platform, and to his left, were many candidates on both the Democratic and Populist county tickets, and it was amusing to see them cheer to the echo the same sentiments, while in county politics they are pulling in different directions. The speakers were equal to the emergency, however, and their allusion to "the county tickets," were conspicuous by their absence. W. T. Spillane, chairman of the Democratic county central committee, was accorded the honor of presiding at the meeting, and did so with his accustomed suavity and ease of manner. Mr. Daly opened his speech with a review of state issues, and then branched off onto national affairs, treating the issues of the campaign quite exhaustively. He is a forcible and eloquent speaker. Following him on the program was A. R. Holston, of Crookston. A campaign in this district would not seem complete without the appearance of this gentleman. His remarks were necessarily brief as the time was divided among three speakers. L. E. Gossman, ex county attorney, of Crookston, was called upon and gave a short business talk. The band was out, and enlivened the occasion with several fine selections.

Mailing a Magazine.

Eighteen men, aided by the fastest mailing appliances, are kept on a rush every month getting The Ladies Home Journal off to its subscribers. The first shipments are started about the middle of each month, and from that time until the twenty fifth the magazines pour out of the Journal's publishing office by the two-horse dray load. On the twenty fifth of each month every Journal has reached its destination, and work in the mailing department slackens for a few days. Some idea of the tremendous size of the Journal's subscription list may be gained when it is known that forty tons of mailing type are required to set up the names of subscribers. There are three-quarters of a ton of each numeral, and it requires twenty thousand galleys to accommodate the subscribers' names in type. This stock would equip six or eight large daily news papers. As many as sixty-five compositors are employed setting the names of the Journal's subscribers in type—printers enough to set the type for the biggest metorpolitan newspaper. The expense for postage paid by the Journal approximates $72,000 a year.

Fables of the Rail--XII.

Once upon a time a Prince loved a beautiful Princess, but the King, her Pa, threw the Prince down, and the Couple Eloped on a White Palfrey. The King, however, rode a Powerful black Arabian and captured the Twain. He had the young Prince Be-headed and locked the Princess in a gloomy tower, but she jumped out one day into a Moat below and was Drowned.

Moral—This terrible tragedy would not have occurred in these modern times because the Prince would have had sense enough to escape on one of the Northern-Western Line's fast trains, seeing which the King would have forgiven the young couple and they would have lived happily ever afterwards.

DeWitt's Little Early Risers are prompt, palatable, pleasant, powerful, purifying little pills. W. A. Schreiter.

WARNING THE PRESS.

The Strictness of Censorship in Russia Described.

Sometimes a journal receives what is known as a warning, says the National Review. The first warning is not regarded very seriously. It is said even that a paper either newly established or which finds its popularity and circulation diminishing not infrequently courts a first or even a second warning in order to gain a reputation for its enterprise and independence.

Sometimes, again, the penalty consists in the withdrawal of the right to expose the paper for sale by number; that is, in the streets, at railway stations, shops, bookstalls, etc., a punishment which is rendered the more severe by the difficulty which exists in St. Petersburg of obtaining newspapers by subscription at short notice. Owing to the fact that the daily delivery of papers is carried out neither by the newspaper offices themselves, nor by news agents, but by the postoffice, subscriptions for papers are only received for periods of a month or more, such period dating always from the first day of the month, the result being that after a new month has commenced it is impossible to obtain by subscription the papers for the rest of that month without paying for all the numbers which have already appeared. The clumsiness of the system tends naturally to make the public more dependent on the sale by number, so that if this right is withdrawn the loss to the paper so punished is necessarily the greater.

A still sharper measure is to forbid the publication of any advertisements, a prohibition which, if enforced for any length of time, almost necessarily involves the ruin of the journal. Or, again, the authorities may require that a particular editor or manager should cease his connection with his paper, as was done in the case of M. Korsh, who in 1878 was compelled to resign his position as editor of the St. Petersburgskiie Viedomosti. Lastly, there is a suppression of the paper either for a limited period, which may be again and indefinitely extended, or in perpetuity. Sometimes the official announcement of the penalty inflicted refers specifically to the article or articles objected to; sometimes it merely declares that the tendency of the paper is harmful; sometimes no reason at all is assigned.

Prize Picked Up at Sea.

One of the richest prizes ever picked up at sea is now making her way across the Atlantic to Gibraltar in charge of six seamen from the British ship Senator. The vessel is the Norwegian iron ship Superb, with a rich cargo of ore, which was picked up in latitude 36 north, longitude 36 west, totally abandoned, but in first-class condition, vessel and cargo being valued at fully $200,000. The prize was spoken on May 24 in latitude 36.04 north, longitude 20.04 west, by Capt. Jones of the British steamship Chiverstone, which arrived at this port yesterday from Carthagena. Despite the fact that the Superb, which is a full-rigged ship, was manned by only six men, there were no requests for assistance made to Capt. Jones, who stated that signals displayed showed that the vessel was proceeding for Gibraltar. When last seen he calculated she was proceeding at the rate of about four knots.—Philadelphia Record.

Passed Under Shower of Tar.

Falling tar from the viaducts of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad at 67th, 68th, 69th, 70th and 72d streets yesterday ruined many hats and bonnets and dresses of Englewood men and women, the hot sun causing a veritable shower of the sticky stuff to rain down upon the sidewalks underneath the tracks, says the Chicago Record. The trouble began about noontime, when the church-goers of the southern suburb began to start homeward, and the "shower" continued all day, pedestrians finding when it was too late that their passage under the viaducts had put them in a very badly bespattered condition. Railway officials say the trouble was caused by the spreading on too thick of the tar on the viaduct floorings in order to make them waterproof, the hot sun thinning it out so that it leaked through the tracks.

"The Scientist That Got Left."

A curious tale comes from Turkey about Dr. Henry van Dyke's story, "The Other Wise Man." Some one had translated the little book, and went to the censor for permission to publish it. "No objection to the book itself," said that autocratic individual, "but the title must be changed. There are no wise men except the followers of Mohammed." The translator suggested other titles, none of which was satisfactory. Then he asked the censor himself to give it a name; and that man of wisdom, after much cogitation, declared that the best title would be "The Scientists That Got Left," or the Turkish equivalent of that slangy Americanism.—The Critic.

No Reserve Ammunition.

The government recently commandeered all the ammunition in England to such an extent that there was not a single cartridge in the possession of any of the volunteer regiments in London. All the reserve ammunition usually stored in the magazines at all volunteer headquarters had been called in to supply troops in South Africa.

Hotel Bric-a-Brac Sold.

The contents of Willard's hotel, Washington, are being sold at auction, and that venerable and historic structure will be torn down this summer and replaced with a new $2,000,000 building, with modern conveniences. It is expected to be one of the finest hotels in the world.

FOR NATIONAL PARK

GENERAL ANDREWS TELLS OF THE PLAN TO SECURE IT.

Miller and Hardy Held for the Wise Murders at Anoka—Northern Pacific and Soo Form a Traffic Arrangement. Three People Drowned at Winona. News of the State In General.

CASS LAKE, Minn., Sept. 25.—General Andrews, state forest fire warden, is on a tour of inspection of these parts. The general, being an enthusiastic worker of the national park and forestry reserve scheme, was asked by a prominent citizen here how it was expected the national park would be acquired. He replied that if the joint committee authorized by the bill, which has already passed the senate, after a visit to this region reports favorable it is expected an act of congress will be passed for a commission to treat with the bands of Chippewas who are interested for buying the reservation in bulk. If a treaty be made, the purchase money in such case will not be paid down, but will be credited to the Indians, and the interest thereon at 5 per cent will be annually appropriated and paid. The project, therefore, will not require a large appropriation, as the opponents of the park assert. When acquired the forest will be managed by scientific foresters.

HELD WITHOUT BAIL.

Alleged Wise Murderers Bound Over to the Grand Jury.

ANOKA, Minn., Sept. 21.—James Hardy and Elmer Miller have been bound over to the grand jury without bail. The witnesses examined during the day gave no evidence differing from that at the first examination. Attorney Wyman for the defense did not cross examine a single witness or offer any evidence. He asked for light bail, but was refused bail at all. Miller and Hardy will be taken to the jail in Minneapolis.

ANOKA, Minn., Sept. 20.—The second examination of James Hardy and Elmer Miller, charged with the murder of Mrs. Wise and son, took place before District Judge Giddings.

Eliza Wise repeated much of her evidence at the first hearing, and in addition swore with much positiveness that she saw both Miller and Hardy outside the house immediately before the shooting. This evidence created the first stir of moment in the court and was related with much interest.

She swore that the Sunday night before the murders the two boys and she and her sister, Martha, planned the crime, it being understood that only the parents were to be killed and that the little boys were to be spared. Hardy and Miller came the next Sunday night, as planned.

TRAFFIC AGREEMENT.

Northern Pacific and Soo Roads Form an Alliance.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 21.—The Northern Pacific and Soo roads have consummated a traffic alliance almost identical with that being perfected between the Northern Pacific and Milwaukee roads. It concerns business directed towards and through Duluth. The agreement concerns freight business only. The diverting points are Glenwood and Bald Eagle. At Glenwood eastbound business, destined for the Head of the Lakes, or farther east for that matter, by lake and rail, will be switched from the Soo line to the Northern Pacific and carried through over the latter to Duluth. Soo business, originating in the Twin Cities or landed there from parts of its western sections, is to be taken over the Soo line to Bald Eagle, where that road intersects the Duluth short line of the Northern Pacific.

DROWNINGS AT WINONA.

Boat Capsizes and Two of the Occupants Perish—Boat Watchman Drowned.

WINONA, Minn., Sept. 25.—While a party of three, consisting of John Czaplewski and wife, and brother Michael, were out in a rowboat fishing, the backwash from a passing steamer caused one of the boat's occupants to lose his balance, capsizing it. John and Michael Czaplewski were drowned, but after a hard struggle Mrs. Czaplewski was saved by a party passing in a rowboat.

Another drowning here was that of George Steiger, watchman of the government boat Cyclone, who fell between the boat and its barge.

VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

Town of La Crescent, Minn., Feels Obliged to Organize One.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Sept. 18.—On account of the prevalence of crime in this vicinity the town of La Crescent, across the Mississippi river from here, has organized a vigilance committee to see if it cannot be suppressed. Will Henforff, Webb Cameron and Don Ferguson have been appointed and will watch all trains and search the railroads at night for desperate characters. If any are caught they will be severely dealt with.

Sons of Hermann Celebrate.

NEW ULM, Minn., Sept. 25.—Eight hundred Sons of Hermann, most of them from St. Paul, came here on an excursion train to celebrate the third anniversary of the dedication of the Hermann monument, erected by the national order. Exercises were held at Hermann's Heights. The principal oration of the day was delivered by Colonel A. R. Kiefer of St. Paul.

Habeas Corpus For Circus Rioters.

DULUTH, Sept. 25.—Habeas corpus proceedings have been begun here for the release of the five employes of the great syndicate circus who are in jail here waiting a hearing in Cass county for rioting. These are the men that the militia arrested at Cloquet some time ago.

UNFORTUNATE EVENTS.

Two additional cases of bubonic plague have been reported at Glasgow.

In a freight wreck on the Queen and Crescent road at Sadieville, Ky., five tramps were killed and four badly hurt.

A cloudburst in the Nueces river country, Texas, has resulted in a terrific flood and much loss of life is reported.

An unknown American fishing schooner has foundered on the Grand Banks and 20 members of her crew were drowned.

Reports of marine disasters during last week's gale in Newfoundland continue to pour in from remote localities. The latest advices show 17 more vessels ashore and 13 lives lost.

The barge Martia, in tow of the steamer Maurice P. Grover, was sunk in the rapids at the entrance to the St. Clair river by the straightback steamer Yuma. Six persons were drowned.

The steamer War Eagle of the Eagle Packet company and the steamer Courier of the Calhoun Packet company were burned to the water's edge at St. Louis and Joseph Schultz, bill clerk of the former, was burned to death.

The storm of Thursday night over Northern and Northwestern Texas was one of the fiercest of which there is any record. The fall of rain in Dallas during the night approximated 3 inches. In Fort Worth, 30 miles west, it was 8 inches. The property loss within a radius of 100 miles of Dallas is estimated at $2,000,000.

BRITISH-BOER WAR NEWS.

The British have occupied Komatipoort without opposition.

Attempts by Portuguese soldiers to disarm Boers entering Portuguese territory has resulted in severe fighting.

A pitched battle has been fought midway between Kaap Muidan and Hectorspruit, resulting in heavy Boer losses.

Reports from Lord Roberts say the Boers who remain in the field include a few irreconcilables, but that the majority are fighting under compulsion.

General Roberts reports that the Boer army has practically disbanded. Seven hundred of the force of 3,000 at Komatipoort retreated into Portuguese territory.

Methuen completely routed a Boer convoy at Hart river west of Klerksdorp and recaptured a 15-pounder lost at Colenso. He also captured 26 wagons, 8,000 cattle, 4,000 sheep, 20,000 rounds of ammunition and 28 prisoners.

TEXAS STORM NEWS.

Sixty-four bodies were taken from the debris at Galveston Saturday.

Martial law has been abolished at Galveston and the civil government has resumed control of affairs.

Bodies being recovered in Galveston are thoroughly saturated with coal oil and thrown into a blazing fire.

Governor Sayres has issued a statement in which he says that the loss of life occasioned by the storm in Galveston and elsewhere on the Southern coast cannot be less than 12,000 lives, while the property loss will probably aggregate $20,000,000.

Conditions at Galveston continue to rapidly improve. People are so busy that they have little time to mourn over their losses. This is doubtlessly fortunate for the sufferers for instead of spending their time in grieving they forget their troubles and lend a helping hand toward the betterment of existing conditions.

HE RODE FOR HIS LIFE.

A Bicyclist Globe Trotter Is Pursued By a Tiger

HE WAS BADLY SCARED

Result of an Hour's Spin Near the Jungles of India—He Had a Good Wheel and Says a Steep Hill Saved Him.

A bicycle race against a tiger with his own life as the stakes, was the unique experience of M. Henri Gilbert, who has just arrived in Paris, France, after a seven years' walking tour of the globe.

He was encamped near the village of Aring, in India, where he met a tourist with whom he was soon on friendly terms, and whose bicycle he borrowed for an hour's spin, the first in two years. M. Gilbert says:

"I left the camp about 1 o'clock in high glee," he says, "the machine running beautifully. After going some little distance I suddenly found myself in a delightful open glade, which was one mass of verdure and flowers. Here I dismounted from the machine, and, placing it against a bush, selected a nice spot on which to rest. Then, taking off my hat, I sat down, and stretching myself out at full length, I prepared for a nice little nap. Suddenly I heard a curious sound in the bed of the watercourse, as though some animal were moving.

"When the dry, crackling sound reached my ears I lifted my head and looked toward the spot. Evidently some large animal was making its way out of the jungle, and presently it came into sight at the water's brink. I can assure you that my heart almost ceased to beat, and a dull, heavy, paralyzing pain appeared to seize the whole of my body when my gaze rested upon the fierce and wicked head and long, lithe, striped body of an immense tiger—I should judge that he was about 30 yards from me.

"Leaping to my feet I fairly hurled myself in the direction of the bicycle. I threw myself upon it, and with the impetus so gained began to glide swiftly along—even before my feet touched the pedals—literally racing the tiger for dear life. The very instant I got fairly under way I heard the huge beast make his first leap in my direction. Notwithstanding the dreadful emotion which I suffered in that awful moment, my control over the machine was complete and my movements sure. At one time it seemed to me as though I were traveling as fast as the very wind.

"Suddenly the frightful thought occurred to me—What if some part of the mechanism give way? I did not, however, relax my efforts, thinking that if I succeeded in putting 50 yards between myself and my dreadful pursuer he would have little chance of overtaking me. In order to show the imminent peril I was in, I may say that the fourth leap of the tiger brought him to within about six yards of my back wheel, and, although I was going as fast as a first-class bicycle can travel, a sixth leap almost brought the claws of the monster within striking distance of my back tire. But still I peddled away desperately, my heart nearly bursting and my legs working like fury.

("Within striking distance of my back tire.")

"As I began to realize that I was gaining a little my exertions were redoubled, I knowing well that any slackening of pace or an extra leap or two on the part of my terrible foe would put an end to the race and my life almost simultaneously. Having gained a little, I glanced around, and saw the tiger was still coming on, and at a great pace.

"Just at this moment I saw in front of me another straight road opening before me. You may judge of my terror, however, when I tell you that as soon as I had turned into this new road I beheld, lying right across my path, a huge tree that had fallen through decay. I charged the obstacle headlong, and, just before crashing into it, I leaped from the machine and scrambled over recklessly, feeling certain that the tiger was gaining. It goes without saying that I literally threw myself into the saddle again with frantic energy, and pedaled away from the inexorable monster. I heard the tiger leap over fallen tree, and, sick at heart, I realized that if the chase lasted much longer I should have to give up.

"Greatly to my relief, however, a short distance in front on my left I saw yet another road, and a ray of hope came to me as I noticed a steep descent. Driving the bicycle with all possible speed, I entered upon the descent like an arrow, and a minute or so later put 50 or 60 yards between my pursuer and myself. I was pretty well done for, however—so much so, that at one time I felt I must fall out of the saddle.

"But luckily, just when I had almost given up all hope of seeing my companions again, a Hindu woman appeared on the road before me, and in answer to my inquiries indicated the road to Aring. Following her directions for about two hours I suddenly beheld Dr. Birasky and a small army of natives he had drummed up to search for me, feeling sure that I had fallen into some trouble or other. That was the end of my exciting ride for life and I don't want another like it, I can assure you."

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

A Golden Dawn.

"You are very good," said the scholar. And they saw him turn his gentle eyes, as he always did when he needed counsel, toward the green grave under the trees. They heard him say something about Elsie.

After a time he looked down at the fair young face lying on his breast.

"My darling," he said, "you are so young, so many things might happen; you might change your mind; you might repent; and so you ought to give me time to see that this is really love and not fancy. At your age, child, it is difficult to tell one from the other. I will agree to the marriage, but it must not take place until the end of next year. I am not unreasonable in asking this delay."

After long argument it was decided; and Alan was forced to be content. After all, it was not unreasonable. She was very young, and the months would pass quickly. How happy they would be! He could spend nearly all his time with her.

Lady Rosedene came in, and they had luncheon together; then, while she rested in the quiet, pretty parlor, where fair Elsie had made such brief sunshine, and Alan went to see that the horses had been fed, Francis Vane and his daughter walked across the garden into the church-yard, and stood by the green grave. He laid his hand on the fair bright head.

"Hyacinth, your mother lies here. I often fancy I see a soft, white cloud above the grass, and that she rests upon it. Tell me, do you love Alan Branston?"

"With all my heart, father," she said. And he knew, from the quiet, self-contained tone how intense that love was.

"I should like to give you one warning, child. You have experienced no love save mine; and mine has been true. I loved your mother while living, and have loved quite as dearly dead. The grave in which she lies is more to me than the living, healing heart of any other woman. But, Hyacinth, my dear child, you must not expect such a love—neither so deep, so true, nor so strong. It does not often fall to a woman's lot."

"It is mine, father." she declared, in a tone of quiet conviction.

He looked sadly at her.

"You must not expect too much," he said; "the love we give and receive on earth is not like the love of heaven. Do not set all the hope of your life, child, on your love."

"Did you do that, father?" she asked. And he answered:

"Yes, it is because I did it that I can warn you."

She smiled as she rejoined:

"Some great poet has written that no warning avails in love.' No warning will avail. Whether my love makes or mars my life matters little. I have given my life with it."

A sunbeam fell on the green grave as she spoke. It was as though the dead would fain have warned the living. And then father and daughter returned to the house.

CHAPTER IX.

The glad days of the happy winter passed away brightly, and the home of the solitary student was brightened by the love and joy of the young lovers. His life was cheered, too by the constant kindness of the squire. Great baskets of game, hot-house fruits, and that which he valued more than all, huge parcels of books, were sent by Alan Branston. It was characteristic of him that he was never so pleased as when lavishing kindness on Francis Vane. He established a rule that he should be allowed to send what he liked to Hyacinth. Francis Vane made some gentle remonstrance; but he was overruled.

"You live out of the world, and I live in it," he answered. "I see what Hyacinth wants, and you do not. I shall think you do not believe in my love for her unless you allow me to send what I will."

The father ceased to remonstrate, and the gallant young lover lavished costly gifts on his beautiful fiancee.

Francis Vane had a small legacy left him, and he gave it all for his daughter's trousseau. He intrusted it to Mrs. Morley, who was only too delighted to assist. The most wonderful week of Hyacinth's life was the one she spent in London, shopping with Mrs. Morley. So the winter months were fully occupied, and some of the brightness of old times came over the house.

It was marvelous how many excuses Alan found for going to Sweetbriers; he rode or drove over regularly, on one pretext or another. Mr. Vane and his daughter became so accustomed to see him that when he was not there the day seemed robbed of its brightness.

The snowdrops, the violets, the yellow crocus, the primroses, all came up. The stern face of winter gave place to the smile of spring. The hedges bloomed with pink and white hawthorn, the dark branches were covered with leaves, meadows were full of life, and when fair sweet May came round Lady Rosedene filled her house again with visitors. She had not found a new beauty, and she must have a pleasant group of friends to welcome her. She invited Hyacinth, who gladly promised to visit her. Said her ladyship:

"You must bring some of your pretty new dresses, Hyacinth. You must do honor to the squire's choice."

When Alan Branston heard that she was going to Dene Hall, he besieged Lady Rosedene until she extended her invitation to him.

She had a presentiment of coming evil, for she said to him:

"Come if you like; but I think you had better spend your time in making Elmsthorpe Grange ready for your wife."

She laughed as she spoke, and he laughed as he answered that he would far rather spend his time in making love to his wife who was to be.

It promised to be a very pleasant and harmonious party. Hyacinth looked forward to it with the greatest delight. She was to go on the second of May, Alan on the fourth. Francis Vane parted with her, fearing no ill, knowing that he would soon lose her altogether. Yet that night, as he sat watching, it seemed to him that a strange cloud rested over his wife's grave.

Hyacinth Vane said to herself that she should always love Dene better than any other place, because it had been the scene of her love story. It was pleasant to linger in the gardens and grounds, to look round the rooms, and remember all that happened there. Lady Rosedene was delighted to see her. She was in excellent spirits.

"People may well call my house attractive," she said, "I have two of the loveliest women in England in it now; and the wonder of it is that you are such foils to each other. You are fair as the northern lily; and my new guest is dark as any Spanish signora—the most beautiful brunette I have ever seen; all other women look plain beside her. Still I prefer fair women."

When Hyacinth went down into the drawing-room, she was better able to judge. Many old friends greeted her, every one was pleased to see the fair young face; Hyacinth saw a superbly beautiful woman, with large liquid eyes, full of fire and passion, and a mouth like a rose. She was a picture of loveliness, on whom no man could look unmoved.

Hyacinth had never seen any one like her. She wore a dress of black velvet, cut so low as to show the marvelous neck and shoulders, with their warm tint, and the bare rounded arms, on which shone rich bands of gold. She carried a richly-jeweled fan, and wore diamonds in the masses of dusky hair that sat like a crown on her head. And her brilliant face had the imperial beauty men in olden days gave to the goddesses they worshipped.

She read the wonder in the tender earnest eyes, and smiled. There was more character in her smile even than in her face—it came slowly, and was, to a keen observer, cruel. Lady Rosedene introduced Hyacinth to her. Lady Fraser smiled again, and in her turn looked intently at her golden-haired rival.

Hyacinth thought the sound of her voice very sweet. She watched her in wonder. She had never seen any one so superbly beautiful, and so superbly dressed.

Lady Fraser was older than herself by some years, and the contrast between the fair, fresh, golden-haired girl and the beautiful dark-eyed woman was curious in its way.

She fascinated Hyacinth—it was a certain fact that, if Lady Fraser once took the trouble to smile in any face, she made the owner of it captive at once. There was no power to resist; she possessed a marvelous gift of fascination.

She smiled a little at the young girl's unconscious homage.

"We shall see what we shall see," said Lady Fraser.

On the fourth of May Alan Branston came, and when he reached the Hall Lady Fraser had gone out into the grounds. She had found for herself a pleasant seat behind the plumed lilac-trees. There a soft western wind, a sweet perfume reached her without the warmth of the sun's rays. There was no one amongst the visitors whom she thought it worth her while to conquer, so she had given her morning to the study of some poems.

Presently, on looking up, she saw a stranger who interested her—a tall, handsome man, young, with a brave bright face, and dark earnest eyes—a man who was evidently a gentleman, from his erect, easy carriage and courtly manner. Who was he?

She answered her own question. It was the squire, of course—Alan Branston—Miss Vane's lover; and a goodly lover he was, in Lady Fraser's eyes. As they passed by the group of lilac-trees, engrossed in each other, and forgetting the world, she heard Alan say:

"I see no beauty in any face but yours, my love. Other faces are all blank to me."

They walked on; but with the sound of the words in her ears an evil spirit entered the beautiful woman's heart. She laughed aloud—a cruel laugh.

"What nonsense," she said to herself. "I will teach him that other faces are not all blanks. My face shall not be a blank to him. So that is the child's lover. Well, he is a gallant one, tall and handsome—simple, too, if he thinks hers the only face on earth worth looking at."

She was a woman of insatiable vanity. She had been so much worshipped all her life for her marvelous beauty that she considered the heart of every man she met her lawful prey.

She had but little trouble in winning them. A gleam from her splendid eyes—a touch of her white jeweled hand—a whisper from her musical voice—a smile from her beautiful lips—and the weak hearts of men went out to her, no matter what bound them. She had never had the least trouble in making a conquest. The strongest and wisest men had fallen before her like the leaves from the trees.

She was cruel. It was play to her to take a man's heart in her soft white hand, and after toying with it for a time, crush it as she would have crushed a rose-leaf. Her vanity was insatiable—nothing ever daunted her. If she liked any one, or thought the conquest of any particular person would add to her reputation as a beauty and winner of hearts, she pursued that person to the bitter end. The gentle heart of a loving wife might break, the love of a fair fiancee might all be turned to gall and bitterness—Lady Fraser merely laughed. All that her victims won in return was a few smiles, a few tete-a-tetes, a week's-fidelity, and then they had to make room for another.

It was dull, according to her notions, at Dene; there were several men, but none whom she cared to win. The handsome young squire, however, took her fancy, and she smiled as she said to herself that she would win him.

"Such boy-and-girl love—such nonsense—only one face in the world for him! It is high time he saw two. It will do him good—educate him. A flirtation with a woman like myself is the best possible education for one like him. It will do the girl good, too, if he talks to her in that way. She will begin to think herself an angel." She had nothing particular to occupy her during the next few weeks, and it would not do to get out of practice. If there had been a handsomer or wealthier man at Dene hall, she would not have troubled Alan; but he looked so handsome and so gallant, added to which there was the irresistable fact that he belonged to some one else, that it would be a little amusement for her, relieve the tediousness of her visit, to captivate him. It would be amusing, because at first he would doubtless rebel. After all, if she chose to educate him and show him that life held more for him than he knew at present, it concerned no one. When she had had her fair share of amusement, she would be leaving Dene, and perhaps should not see him again. She would not wish to see him—a few weeks were quite enough for any poor moth.

She laughed softly to herself as she thought how the fair-haired girl would be lost in a maze of wonder and doubt, and how rejoiced she would be to win her lover again.

She walked back leisurely to the house.

"Yes," she said to herself, "I have nothing better to do. I will try if I can win him."

And she dressed with unusual care, smiling as she did so to think how easy her conquest would be.

CHAPTER X.

"He is worth winning"—that was Lady Fraser's verdict after she had passed an evening in Alan's society.

True, he had devoted himself to Hyacinth; but she had had time to note the beauty of his face, the grace of his manner; and Lady Rosedene had told her that he was wealthy beyond the ordinary run of squires—so wealthy, in fact, that Miss Vane was the envy of all the young ladies in the county.

Lady Fraser opened her beautiful eyes. Surely she could desire no better husband than this handsome young squire, who was wealthy enough to gratify every whim? Still marriage was an affair of the future. She had not that to think about yet.

Very soon she had attracted his attention, as she felt sure she should. She had startled him out of his calmness. He had looked into the depths of her splendid eyes, and for one half moment had lost himself. He had admitted to himself that her beauty was wonderful; and then he had turned with redoubled love to Hyacinth. It was like rest in the sweet moonlight after the overpowering light of day.

"He will not forget me," said Lady Fraser to herself. "He knows now that there is another fair face in the world, and he will be puzzled soon as to which is the fairer."

When the hour of retiring came, Alan wished her good night. Once more those wonderful eyes of hers were raised to his, and seemed to pour a flood of electric light into them. Sweet Hyacinth, standing near, saw the look, and shrank from it.

Lady Fraser went to her room well content.

"He will think of me," she said to herself; "and to-morrow he will be anxious to see me again. He will have more to dream of to-night than a baby face and golden hair."

She lay back in the easy chair in her dressing-room while her maid brushed out the long silken dusky hair. She looked over an album filled with photographs, and smiled, as she thought that she should in all probability add Alan's to the number.

The first she glanced at with a light laugh—the original had simply ruined himself for her sake—believed in her, asked her to marry him; then, when she had laughed at him, had thrown up his commission and gone to the bad.

"How he loved me," she said to herself; "but how foolish he was!"

The next portrait was that of a fair-haired clergyman. She laughed again as she remembered the tragedy of his despair They told her that he died cursing her. It mattered little to her whether he did so or not. Then came the sad face of a young Frenchman, whose eyes seemed to look at her with the weariness of passion and despair.

"I never liked him," she thought; "I should never have cared to know him; but that white-faced little countess professed to believe him so loyal to her."

Then came a soldier with a bronzed face and fearless look. He had led his regiment against a fire few would have cared to meet—he had fought desperately; but on the day that this beautiful woman smiled in his face, and told him that she had no more thoughts of marrying him than she had of turning Mohammedan, he went home with the soft sweet laugh ringing in his ears and shot himself.

Her brilliant face paled a little as she remembered this, and she turned the page with a sigh. She never liked to think of Colonel Leslie and his dreadful death. Then came the handsome face of the youngest son of a noble house. She would have married him had he possessed any money; but he had none. So she let him ride away, leaving the best part of his life behind him. Then came the face of the man she married, a city knight, whose wife she had been for one short year. An old, stern face it was, full of wrinkles, with harsh eyes and lips. But Sir Heriot Fraser had been a good husband to her, and had left her all his money without any conditions or stipulations. She never pretended to mourn his death, but she wore crape in the most becoming fashion, resolving to enjoy herself for a few years, and then to marry again. In the meantime, her craving for the cruel amusement of flirtation was at times too strong for her.

Some people had asked who Lady Fraser was. No one knew anything about her. She said herself that she belonged to the "Lanches of Durham;" but one or two suspected that she was the daughter of a French milliner, who had married the captain of a Spanish ship.

But Lady Fraser was so beautiful, and she had so large a fortune that the world refused to listen to any scandal about her. Had she been plain or dowerless, it would have refused to believe that she was one of the Lanches of Durham; but with such a face and such a fortune she might have claimed to be whom she would.

Quickly enough she passed the portrait of the city knight who had been her husband for one brief year. Then came others—dark, fair, young, old—all men whom she had slain as surely as though she had used poison or steel. She ceased to smile when she came to the portrait of Count Fieschi—a man with a handsome, passionate, cruel face—a man with pitiless eyes and sensual lips. She lingered some over that.

There came to her a host of memories. Last year she had gone to Italy with some friends, and they had stayed at Ravenna. She thought of a moonlit night there, in the garden of the Palazzo Micheli, when the handsome count had seemed to fight with himself over his love for her. And at last—at last he had sacrificed his patriotism and everything else to love; while she had lured him on, and then refused him, because he could not keep her in the luxury she loved. She remembered another evening when the fiery love of the Italian had urged him into a tempest of anger—it was the night before her return to England—and he had said to her:

"Take care! If you go, I shall follow you. If I follow, I shall find you. If I find you, I will kill you before your beauty has power to mar the life of another man."

Her laugh had floated away on the soft summer breeze—sweet and soft as the rose leaves stirred by the wind, but there was no smile on his face, and no mercy in his eyes.

"If ever he finds me, I am lost," she said to herself. "But he will not; I am safe enough. And if he finds me—this is the nineteenth century—he will not harm me."

Still she was glad to pass over the cold, handsome, cruel face.

"That was about the only mistake I ever made; I will forget it."

She looked at many other faces, and then came to a vacant space.

"Here," she said to herself, with a smile, "I will put Alan Branston, squire of Elmsthorpe Grange;" and then, with a sigh, she put down the album, and turned her attention to the dressing of her hair.

She had forgotten every graver consideration, and was wondering what style would attract the squire most.

It was a beautiful morning that followed, and at breakfast time Lady Rosedene proposed that her guests should visit an old ruin called Elmhurst—an ancient priory of which only walls and windows remained. The proposal was agreed to.

"Will you walk or drive, Hyacinth?" asked Alan. "Whichever you prefer, I will be your companion."

Then Lady Fraser spoke, her dark eyes all bright, her smile so brilliant and sweet. She turned her graceful head to Alan.

"I will tell you what would really be a treat to me," she said. "I hear that you are a capital horseman. Will you ride with us—that is, with Miss Vane and myself?"

"I do not like riding," put in Hyacinth, quietly.

The beautiful widow smiled.

"The more you have of it the more you will like it," she said.

And Hyacinth mentally hoped Alan would refuse; she even felt aggrieved that any one should offer to interrupt their tete-a-tetes—Lady Rosedene never did.

But Alan was flattered. The voice had not said much, but those bewitching eyes said plainly that she admired his riding and wished to ride with him.

"How do you know I ride well?" he asked; and she saw the pleasant impression her words had made on him.

"Some one told me—I do not remember who it was," was the careless reply; "but I should like to see you put to the test."

"I will ride with you with pleasure," he said. "Hyacinth, you have your habit here; you will not be long in dressing, I know."

Lady Fraser smiled sweetly.

"Is Miss Vane an adept at dressing quickly?" she asked.

"Miss Vane is perfection," laughed the young squire; and Hyacinth went away to dress, but not with her usual alacrity.

Why should Lady Fraser disturb their plans and go with them? Hyacinth was not a good rider, and as an equestrian was always more frightened than pleased. Lady Fraser, on the contrary, was never seen to such advantage as on horseback.

The more Hyacinth thought of the plan proposed, the more she disliked it. She had pictured herself by her lover's side, walking through the green fields and lanes, stopping to gather the hawthorn and look at the clover. She wrote a little note, simply:

"Dearest Alan—Do alter the arrangements; I do not like riding. We require no chaperon. Some one else will be pleased enough to ride with Lady Fraser."

She never dreamed but that he would eagerly meet her wish. To her intense surprise, the answer that was returned said:

"My Darling,—How sorry I am. But I have arranged so completely with Lady Fraser that I cannot disappoint her. She has asked me to show her the various places of interest in the neighborhood; I cannot draw back now or I would. I will take great care of you, my darling."

Her face flushed as she read the note. The first flame of jealousy rose in her heart—the flame that afterward became so fierce a fire. He had chosen to please Lady Fraser rather than her. She would not go at all; they should have the ride to themselves. When the guests were starting, she sent an apology—she would rather remain at home; and it was then too late to make fresh arrangements.

Lady Fraser noted the darkened look that came over Alan's face. He should suffer for it in the days to come. Her eyes were full of sweetness, her voice was full of music, when she said—

"I am so sorry, Mr. Branston—it is my fault that Miss Vane is not here."

But she exerted herself so well to please him that he could not help enjoying his ride. He came home smiling, while the beautiful widow was radiant. And that was the first cloud in Hyacinth's sky.

CHAPTER XI.

It gave additional zest to the beautiful widow's pursuit of Alan when she saw the first look of pain on Hyacinth's face. To win the love which did not belong to her was one triumph; to find that she made a girl younger than herself jealous was another, and ever so much more enjoyable.

Hyacinth uttered no word of reproach to her lover; with her keen woman's instinct she perceived that he was not one who would like a woman's reproaches and tears. He told her how annoyed he was to find that Lady Fraser was his companion instead of herself. She asked him if he enjoyed his ride, and he laughed heartily as he answered, "Yes." He repeated some of Lady Fraser's wittiest speeches, as though they had amused him very much.

"Lady Fraser is very witty," said the young girl; and he did not see the wistful expression in the eyes that he had likened to cornflowers grown under the ardor of the French sky.

He thought her very silent. After a time she laid her soft hand on his.

"I wish that I were witty, Alan," she said.

"So you are, my darling," he laughed.

"Not so witty as Lady Fraser," she said.

"I should not wish you to be witty after the same fashion. Lady Fraser is what we call chic; you are original and poetical, which is far better."

"Are you sure it is better?" she asked.

"Yes; there is no doubt about it," he answered; and the words pleased her. But the same morning, in her coquet-

AT HER CHATEAU.

How Prima Donna Calve Spends the Summer Months.

About Calve's glerious succession of triumphe during recent years all the world knows. We gasp at the small fortune paid her each time she sings; wa watch her wonderful acting with bated breath; we feel uplifted by her voice and presence. But not so much is known of Calve, the women—a topic not a whit less fascinating. Each summer is spent at her chateau at Cavriere, near Aveyron. There is a pretty romence connected with this country seat, says the Woman's Home Companion. When as a girl she used to walk past this place each day her most derling dreem was to some time be rich enough to purchase it. After success came the dream was realized. Today she spends as much time as possible there in company with her perents and brothers and sisters. To the village folks Calve is an ideal Lady Bountiful. She visits the poor, takes the sick all sorts of tempting delicacies, interests herself in securing positions for the unemployed. The village children fairly worship her. Calve loves children. She will sit for hours on the lawn under the big trees surrounded by a group of admiring children, telling them stronge tales of what she has seen and heard in foreign lands, or relating legends of long ago. Cats are Calve's pets omong animals. She finds them the most independent and coquettish of created things, and full of occult influence. She does not care at all for jewelry. Wild verbena is her perfume, carnation her flower, autumn her season, Ophelia her favorite role.

Liquid from Stove Pipes.

The dark-colored liquid that forms in the stove-pipe or chimney, especially when the fire is started, is the tar, etc., contained in the wood. The heat not being strong enough to consume these matters, they are distilled off in the form of smoke, and coming in contact with the cold stove-pipe and chimney are condensed into liquid form. The operation is very much like what goes on in a still, the cold stove-pipe acting as a condenser. The liquid is of rather complex composition, containing in addition to tar, a considerable portion of pyroligneous acid, besides some creosote, wood naphtha, and other products. Pyroligneous acid is a crude form of acetic acid, which, of course, is not poisonous, but the creosote and wood-naphtha are decidedly so. These, however, are in such small proportions that the liquid as a whole can hardly be said to be poisonous. It would not be a good plan to apply it regularly to house plants, but it would be useful for an occasional application to destroy insect pests.

Food of Rugged People.

Peasants of Russia live mainly upon thin vegetable soup, sauerkraut, rye bread and oil. The Scotch highlander, whose courage and hardihood is proverbial, seldom touches meat, living mainly upon oatmeal, vegetables and buttermilk. Among the most active and vital people of the world are the Irish peasants, whose diet consists almost entirely of potatoes and buttermilk. The farmers of Corsica live all winter upon dried fruit, mainly dates and polenta (chestnut) meal. During the middle ages the Moors used to provision their fortified cities with chestnuts and olive oil. Chestnuts provide almost a perfect food and, in fact, they constitute a staple article of diet among the peasantry of certain portions of Italy.

Pennsylvania to Buy Valley Forge.

Historic Valley Forge is to become a state park. It is the purpose to take immediate steps toward the purchase of this historic ground by the state of Pennsylvania. A committee has been appointed to correspond with all patriotic societies throughout Pennsylvania, and all Americans who have the good name of Washington at heart are appealed to for the purpose of helping along the crusade. The proprietary rights of the Valley Forge association are not to be infringed upon, for the extensive territory contains many landmarks that are now falling into decay. It is these historic mementos of the revolution which will be taken care of when once the state of Pennsylvania is the overseer of Valley Forge

Cherry Blight.

The rustiness of the celery plants described above is probably due to a fungous disease called celery leaf rust. This attacks the leaf of the plant, but causes the most injury to the leaf stem where its presence is not usually so apparent. This disease often develops in the seed beds, and plants that are so infested should be carefully treated before being set in the field. The best treatment consists in cutting off the diseased leaves and spraying the remaining plants with Bordeaux mixture. Two applications of this fungicide, one given to the plants in the seed beds and the other soon after they are set in the field, will usually prevent any injurious effect of this fungus.

BOARD OF TRADE.

Organization Effected Monday Night and Active Work Begun.

An adjourned meeting of the business men's organization was held at the court house Monday night, and although rain was falling in torrents, and the night was excessively dark and disagreeable, the following gentlemen were present—Mayor Watson, Theo. LaBissoniere, Adam Zeh, E. J. Jones, J. A. Duffy, H. H. Zaiser, P. B. Gaass, A. W. Wood, P. A. Kaufer, S. A. Swanson, A. M. Anderson, W. A. Schreiter, Thos. Germo, Wm. McIntyre, J. B. Armstrong. E. L. Healy and Chas. N. Bourdon.

Dr. Watson was appointed chairman of the meeting and Theo. LaBissoniere. secretary.

The election of officers was by motion and without contest, and resulted as follows:

President, J. A. Duffy.
1st vice president, W. A. Schreiter.
2nd vice president, H. M. Kans.
Secretary, A. W. Wood.
Treasurer, H. H. Zaiser.

It was decided to name the organization the Board of Trade.

The committee on constitution and by-laws, not having received replies to certain letters, were not prepared to report, but will be ready for the next meeting, which will be held at the court house next Monday night.

The chair was authorized to appoint the following committees, each one to include himself:

Improvement committee, whose duty it shall be to keep a general lookout for chances to push the city's interests.

Railroad committee. whose duties are defined by the title.

Good Roads committee, to look after the improvements of the highways leading into the city.

Publicity committee, to look after the proper advertising for the board.

Mr. Germo was called upon and made a brief, but telling, speech, in which he pointed out the benefits to be derived from this organization, and painted in glowing terms the future of Red Lake Falls, under proper guidance. He also scored the railroad service, which he said was the worst in the state for a city of this size.

The matter of a place of meeting was talked over, and it was decided to continue meeting in the court house until such time as other quarters could be obtained. It seemed to be the sentiment of the meeting that rooms on the ground floor should be secured and properly furnished, and a janitor provided, so that the quarters would be always in inviting shape, where the business men of the city could come together for conferences, or casually drop in at their leisure.

That so representative a gathering of business men could be got together on such a night, bodes well for the success of the organization.

The next meeting will be held Monday night, Oct. 8, at the court house.

A Novel Plan.

An organization of the HighSchool has recently been effected that has for its general object the advancement of all school interests, and at present is directing it efforts toward securing a piano for the HighSchool assembly room. With this end in view an entertainment is being prepared, which will probably be given at the opera house. on the night of November 6, election day.

The plan is to have a wire run across to the opera house and receive the bulletins of election returns at that place, these bulletins to be thrown upon a screen by a stereoptican lantern at intervals between the numbers of the program.

An admission fee of twenty-five cents will be charged, the proceeds to go toward the piano fund. The plan has received the endorsement of the Board of Education and leading business men and politicans, and it is believed will be given the hearty support of all Red Lake Falls citizens. This will enable everyone, ladies and children, as well as men, to observe in comfort the fascinating development of the outcome of our national, state and local elections. More details will follow.

H. S. Social.

Be sure and come to the social Saturday evening, Oct. 13, at the city hall. Everybody come as it will be given for the improvement of the school.

Committee.

High School Notes.

Edited by
Eleanor Findeisen, Catherine Pirath and Pauline Nieland.

Don't forget the social to be given by the Junior Class Club at the city hall, Oct. 13. Every body be sure and come. From 5 to 9 P. M.

Saturday the H. S. A. A. went to Crookston for the purpose of playing the base ball team of the Crookston High School. In the first game the score was 12 to 14 in favor of Crookston. In the second game. which was for the championship, the score was 12 to 20 in favor of our boys. which considering the small amount of practice, was very good. The batteries were Schreiter and Schusser for our team and Martin, Hanson, Fournet and Morin, for Crookston. Our boys are still hoarse, from which we judge that the H. S. cry is already well known in Crookston. We hope that when the Crookston boys come here to play they will leave behind the profane language of which they made such proficient use during the game. we are pleased to hear that our boys were more gentlemanly than to commit such an offense.

The monthly meeting of the H. S. O. which was held at the home of Mrs. W. Spillane, was a very enjoyable affair. The evening was spent in progressive crokinoe and caroms. Miss Beatta Haage scored the ladies' head prize, while Dan Johnson secured the gentlemen's.

Bessie and William Hunt and Marjorie Rodgers, have not yet resumed their studies.

Pauline Nieland was also absent during the week.

Judging from the way the boys amuse themselves at noon, the girls have decided that a punching bag is the crying need of the H. S. A. A. at present.

At the last meeting of the J. C. C. it was decided that recitations be given by two members of the class each week. It was moved and carried that a fine of 1 cent be imposed upon any member not wearing the class colors. The President being absent the Vice Pres. assumed her duties.

The H. S. A. A. have decided to give a grand ball at the Maccabee hall, Friday Oct. 19, for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the association. Supper will be served by the H. S. O.

Business Changes.

Last Thursday Otto and Fred Zaiser purchased the livery business of Chas. Bourdon, while Jos. Sally bought his dray line. Mr. Bourdon then purchased a half interest in the Healy Land Company. This was a considerable shaking up in the business situation, but all parties seem to be well pleased with the outcome. Zaiser Bros. will continue the livery business at the old stand, leasing the stable from Mr. Bourdon. They are popular gentlemen, and good business men who will no doubt hold the fine trade built up by Mr. Bourdon in his 15 years' control of the business. Mr. Sally, who has bought the dray line, has been the head push in the business for many years past, and is a young man who possesses the confidence of the public in no small degree. As to the new firm of Healy & Bourdon, it would be hard to conceive of a stonger team of popular hustlers. and that they will keep the real estate market active, and continue to do a big business goes without saying. The Gazette wishes all hands abundant success.

Death of Louis Morinville.

Louis Morinville died Tuesday morning at his home in Lake Pleasant township, after an illness of nearly a year, with dropsy, at the age of 69 years. The funeral took place this morning, from St. Joseph's church, and the remains were interred in the Ridge cemetery.

Mr Morinville came to this section twenty-one years ago from Penetanguishene, Ont., settling on his homestead in Lake Pleasant township. where he has resided ever since. By judicious management he accumulated a comfortable sustenance, and was regarded as one of the solid farmers of the county. He leaves a wife and three sons, George, Tellesfore and Joe. Thus the pioneers of this section are one by one passing away, leaving their footprints in the development and advancement of a section of Minnesota that but a few years ago was uninhabited, save by the Red Man.

A HOLY MISSION.

To be Held in St. Mary's Church, From Nov. 11 to 18.

An 8-day mission will be given in St. Mary's church by the Benedictine Fathers Augustine and Alfred. It is the first mission of the kind given here. It will begin on Sunday, Nov. 11, and end on Sunday, November 18.

The doors of our humble church are open to all, and no obstacle should be able to prevent us from attending the sermons and the exercises of devotion, from beginning to end. We have not the opportunity of attending a mission every year. The object of a mission is to instruct in the truths of holy religion, and lead the faithful on to live up to these truths and teachings, for "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Hebr. XI 6 also "Faith without good works is dead." St. James II 26. "Faith cometh by hearing: and hearing by the word of Christ." Rom. X 17.

The welfare of the mission is recommended to the fervent prayer of all.

ORDER OF EXERCISES.

Sunday, Nov. 11. At 9 a. m. early mass and opening of the mission.

At 11 a. m., highmass and sermon.

At 3 p. m., rosary devotion.

At 7:30 p. m., sermon.

During the week, at 5.45 a. m., the first mass and English exhortation.

At 9 a. m. the second mass and German sermon.

At 7:30 p. m., English sermon after part of the Rosary.

Tuesday, Nov. 12, at 2:30 p. m., conference for young ladies. then Stations.

Wednesday, Nov. 14, at 2:30 p. m., conferences for married ladies, then Stations.

Sunday afternoon, conferences for young and married men.

At the closing a Mission Cross will be erected.

Confessions will not be heard before Thursday.

Persons in the city will certainly show their hospitality and thereby afford outsiders an opportunity to reap the abundant fruits of a mission.

Another Case of Insanity.

Cases of insanity seem to be increasing in Red Lake county with startling rapidity. The latest unfortunate is Charlie Gomoll, of Gervais township, against whom information of insanity was entered in the probate court Friday morning. The examination Friday afternoon before Judge Knight elicited the fact that Gomoll had been working with the Ford threshing crew, and had for several days been acting queerly, finally becoming entirely unmanageable. He labored under the hallucination that those about him had designs on his life, and the vigor with which he prosecuted his self defense made it dangerous for those around him. Other manifestations of his mania were in supposed conversations with his deceased father, and at times he became extremely violent. He was consigned to the custody of Patrolman Brunelle. who started with him for Fergus Falls via the Great Northern in the afternoon. At Crookston, where it was necessary to change cars. Gomoll became so violent that, although he was handcuffed. it required five men to handle him. A wife and six children, the eldest a girl of ten years. are thus deprived of his support and protection. The family have lived hereabouts for several years and are quite well known.

Terrific Rain Storm Deluges the Upper Mississippi Valley.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Sept. 28.—A heavy rain and thunder storm over the entire Upper Mississippi river valley has deluged the entire country to a greater or less extent and made roads almost impossable. The damage to the crops which are still outside will be quite extensive. A similar storm is reported over the whole of the Southern Minnesota division of the Milwaukee road, which extended far into South Dakota. There also was considerable damage done to farmers.

MINNEAPOLIS' TABLE.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 2.—The famous McKinley convention table has at last been returned to the South Side high school. It arrived from Philadelphia in charge of James Tripp, who went to the convention city to reclaim it. Shevlin, the delegates from the Fifth Minnesota district.

DAM BLOWN OUT.

Water in Cass Lake Is Higher Than for Many Years.

CASS LAKE, Minn., Sept. 28.—The Scanlon-Gipson dam at the outlet of Cass lake in the Mississippi river was blown out owing to the exceedingly high water in the lake. Indians who have resided here for 60 and 70 years state that the water is higher than it has ever been in their time. The removal of the dam was necessary to avoid the flooding of the Glenmont & Niel Lumber company's mill.

He will settle in the West and says that next spring a large contingent of Boers will come to this country. The object of his trip to St. Paul is to secure satisfactory rates to the West for his countrymen.

Northwestern Flour Output.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 27.—According to The Northwestern Miller the flour output at Minneapolis last week was 338,415 barrels, against 330,725 barrels for the corresponding week of 1899. Superior-Duluth last week ground 10,940 barrels against 29,325 barrels for the corresponding week of 1899. No large business done in flour the past week. Wheat advanced too rapidly to inspire confidence with buyers, and sales averaged only about three-quarters of production.

Northwestern Pioneer Dead.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 26.—Dudley H. Hersey, an early resident of Minnesota, is dead in this city, after a lingering illness. He was 55 years old and came to Minnesota in the early 60's. For many years he was engaged in the lumber business at Stillwater. He established the town of Arvilla, N. D., and the Arvilla wheat and stock farm.

Smooth Swindler Sentenced.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Oct. 2.—Tim Murray, the very smooth young man who so easily victimized several local politicians by representing himself as a collector for the national committees of either party that came handiest, was taken before Judge Brindley where he pleaded guilty to obtaining money under false pretenses and was sentenced to one year in state's prison.

Mill and Elevator Burned.

FOND DU LAC, Wis., Oct. 1.—The Helmer Milling plant, together with a large elevator adjoining, which contained 30,000 bushels of grain, burned during the day. Loss $65,000; insurance about half that amount. The plant was considered one of the best in the state.

Bought a Railway.

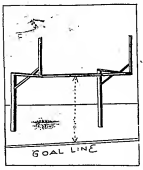
Prominent Iowan Dead.

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—Colonel D. Freeman Ellsworth, an old time Democrat, once candidate for governor of Iowa, is dead at Eldora, aged 90 years. He held many positions of trust and was delegated to several national conventions.

THE SPORTING WORLD.

Plunging full backs and rushing half backs will no longer be obliged to suffer with broken heads when they gain the last yard required for a touchdown directly in front of their opponents' goal posts, for E. Manley, a graduate of Harvard university, has invented a "safety goal post" for football fields. The invention possesses all the merits of the old uprights, but obviates the head bumping features by removing the bases of the posts back ten feet from the goal line. The invention is a simple affair, but will free football from one of its most dangerous features. The goal posts will be set back ten feet from the goal line instead of being on it, as heretofore. But at the point where the crossbar formerly was arms will project out over the goal line, supporting the crossbar. By this arrangement the bar will be in its proper place, while the unyielding goal posts will be far enough away so that the carrier of the pigskin need not fear for his head when he hurls himself for a touchdown. Technically the position of the goal posts is not in accord with the intercollegiate rules, but this is a mere matter of words.



THE NEW GOAL POSTS.

Walter Camp of Yale, Bob Wrenn of Harvard, Alexander Moffat of Princeton and John C. Bell of Pennsylvania, all members of the intercollegiate rules committee, are in favor of adopting the "safety goal post" for all college games.

Coach Woodruff of Pennsylvania has already ordered the new posts for use on Franklin field during the coming season.

Hints For Cyclists.

Most repairs are necessitated through careless riding. A man who keeps his wheel clean and well oiled and who is willing to walk up a hill rather than stretch his chain or to walk over broken stone or cinders rather than risk a puncture is likely to pay little for repairs. Many tires are ruined by being ridden when too soft. The tire is then folded and pinched between the edge of the rim and the pavement, and thus becomes rim worn.

A good family chain cleaner can be made by fixing an old sprocket wheel on an axle attached to a post or other upright. A small tin pail should be placed beneath the wheel, so that the chain, when placed on the wheel, will hang down in the pail. To clean the chain the pail is filled with kerosene and the chain is passed rapidly through it by revolving the wheel until cleaned. It is then wiped dry and may be lubricated by being run through a bath of lubricating oil in the same manner. By this method there is no danger of soiling either the hands or the clothing no matter how soiled the chain may be.

In lubricating with any heavy grease, the best plan is to remove the lubricating cups and, after melting the lubricant, force it into the bearing by the aid of a syringe. It is well to give it two doses one on either side, with the wheel lying flat on either side in turn. By this means the oil is certain to reach the ball races, where it is needed. The thick oils may be applied in the same manner. It is well to plug the lubricating holes with a bit of cotton after oiling in order to prevent the lubricant from escaping when the wheel rests with the hole downward. Some persons lubricate the crank bearings by removing the seat post and pouring the lubricant down the tube, but this is liable to carry iron filings and small bits of turnings into the bearings.

The Letter of the Law.

Among the many serious discussions over the interpretation of certain rules of golf it is refreshing to come across something amusing. The rule to the effect that "before striking the ball the player shall not move, bend or break anything fixed or growing near the ball" has many a time led to a serious dispute, but the humorous interpretation of the rule, according to The Scotsman, was made in the course of a game at Ranelagh.

One of the players directed his caddie to drive away some lambs which were in the line of fire, and when this had been done he played his stroke in comfort. His surprise was great when his adversary promptly claimed the hole on the ground that the lambs were "growing," and according to the rule the penalty for removing anything growing was the loss of the hole.

An old hand might easily smile at this claim, but it might disconcert a younger player and prove sufficient to win more than one hole by putting him "off his game." Such an instance actually occurred once in the East Lothian Country cup competition, when a young north Berwick player, who had innocently removed a growing worm from the line of his putt, was accused by an elderly opponent of breaking this rule. The thing was done in jest, but the blush of the youth and the erratic nature of his play for some time after showed that the joke had quite unintentionally done mischief.

Boxers captured by the allies in Peking have been executed.

Belief is expressed that Germany and China will soon be at war.

Preparations are being made in Peking for a winter campaign.

Great Britain has declined the German proposal to insist on the punishment of Chinese officials responsible for recent outrages before opening peace negotiations.

All the foreign ministers have addressed notes to Prince Ching suggesting the return to Peking of the emperor and the court. The notes were informal and not written in a diplomatic capacity.

At a conference of foreign generals at Peking Sept. 25 the Russian commander, General Linevitch, announced the immediate withdrawal from Peking of the bulk of the Russian troops and the legation.

Orders from Washington directing the withdrawal of the bulk of the American troops have been received at Tien Tsin, and preparations to comply were begun immediately. General Chaffee is directing the movement.

The Chinese emperor has issued an edict ordering the punishment of government officials for encouraging the Boxers. The edict orders the degradation of four princes and deprives Prince Tuan of his salary and official servants. He is to be brought for trial before the imperial clen court.

An agreement on the Chinese programme has been arranged between France, Germany and Russia. It will be submitted to the other powers within a few days. The action recommended will be milder than Germany's original proposal and it is expected that all the powers will accept the programme.

It is stated in diplomatic quarters that definite and official information has been received that Prince Tuan has been appointed president of the privy council of China, instead of grand secretary, as was first reported, and that a number of other Chinese officials prominent in the recent uprisings have been similarly honored.

Theodore Vongrecht, a native of Holland, who for years has resided in the Transvaal, is in St. Paul. He will settle in the West and says that next spring a large contingent of Boers will come to this country. The object of his trip to St. Paul is to secure satisfactory rates to the West for his countrymen.

The Scanlon-Gipson dam, at the outlet of Cass lake, was blown out, owing to the exceedingly high water in the lake. Indians who have resided there for 60 and 70 years state that the water is higher than it has ever been and the removal of the dam was necessary to avoid the flooding of the Glenmont & Niel Lumber company's mill.

What appears to be an extensive deposit of iron ore has been discovered in the heart of the business section of Duluth. It is hard, black ore, running high in iron. The deposit was found by workmen engaged in digging for a basement foundation for the Third avenue side of a part of the First National bank building. One of the most pretentious business blocks in Duluth stands over property that could be developed into an iron mine.

It arrived from Philadelphia in charge of James Tripp, who went to the convention city to reclaim it. Shevlin, the delegates from the Fifth Minnesota district.

Both speakers were well received. Mr. Metcalf made the opening address. He was followed by Samuel Dickie, after which Mr. Woolley was introduced. Oliver W. Stewart concluded the meeting with a forcible address.

Smooth Swindler Sentenced.

FOR THE FARMER.

To insure pure milk the atmosphere in which the cows are milked must be pure. Putting down hay or cleaning out the stable just before milking is a bad practice. The milk in passing from the teat to the pail through an atmosphere laden with stable odors and dust may become sufficiently contaminated to materially affect the flavor of the butter. For similar reasons we hear milking in the barnyard condemned, especially in dry, dusty weather. I noticed in England the farmers had milking sheds in or near the pasture fields and that the men had long linen ulsters which they slipped on when going to milk. I thought this a good idea, as it tended to cleanliness in milking and also to a saving of the clothes. Before starting to milk, the flanks and udder of the cow should be wiped with a damp cloth to remove all loose hairs and dirt which otherwise might fall into the milk pail. It is found a good practice to cut off the cow's switch and clip the hair from the hind quarters when putting her in for the winter. Endeavor as far as possible to have the cows milked by the same person, at the same hour, in the same place and in the same order. Milk with dry hands, vigorously and exhaustively. Nothing will prolong the milking period more than by getting the last drop, and, remember, the first pint has but 1 per cent butter fat, while the last pint has 10 per cent. Bacteriologists tell us the small amount of milk which has collected in the teat abounds with injurious forms of bacteria, while the remaining portion of the milk is practically germ free, and they recommend not allowing the first stream to go into the milk pail.

Stamp Your Honey Packages.

It is a good plan for all apiarists to put their name and address on all packages of nice honey, either in combs or extracted. A rubber stamp, with plain letters three-eighths of an inch high, is best to mark sections, but bottles or cans of extracted honey must have a printed label pasted on. The marking of first class honey or good goods of any kind is a help to everybody who handles it. If the jobber has any fault to find he can easily trace it to the producer. If the grocer likes it he will be apt to remember the name and buy some more of it, while the consumer will do the same.

If you are producing a superior article in quantity, marking it and selecting a reliable jobber and sticking by him, it will be a profitable undertaking, but it won't pay to change jobbers every year or to put your name on anything but a good grade of honey. The ground is taken by jobbers that they do not want the honey stamped, because putting the producer's name on it leads the retailer to deal direct with the producer to the demoralization of the market. They should more truthfully say, to the loss of their profit. Manufacturers of clothing, of wagons, fancy butter and many other lines of goods put their name on the goods, and the jobber is helped thereby. Darlington butter brings 75 cents per pound because it is Darlington butter. If Tom Jones takes extra pains in handling the carload of fine honey which he produces every year there is no harm in letting the people know that it is Tom Jones' honey and that it is worth 1 cent per pound more because it is as represented.—American Agriculturist.

Rye as a Farm Crop.

Rye is one of the best paying crops, as far as dollars and cents go, raised in Columbia county, N. Y. We have paper mills that use a good deal of straw, and several large flouring mills that use the rye, taking it from year to year. The same acreage of rye brings us more money than hay, and the quantity is on the increase, if anything. The average yield of rye per acre for our county is estimated to be 16 bushels, but a great many reach 20 and more. I had a field of less than eight acres that had 157 bushels of grain and 12 tons of straw. The machines for thrashing rye, cleaning and measuring at the same time, are used entirely. They leave the straw in nice shape, all bound and ready for the market. To have a bountiful crop, it needs to be protected through the winter and spring.—George W. Higgins in Rural New Yorker.

Hog Prospects.

Those who are in position to judge do not anticipate large supplies and bad breaks in the hog market before the opening of the winter packing season, Nov. 1. Reports from all over the country indicate that numbers of hogs to be finished this summer and fall are not large. In spite of a big corn crop ahead it is very likely that the winter season will open with hog prices well above those of last year, and, moreover, that prices during the coming winter will average well. A bumper corn crop usually means very cheap hogs, but this condition promises to be modified next winter by an excellent demand for provisions. Definite calculations are impossible at such long range, but there is every indication of a healthy hog market next winter at prices comparing favorably with values of corn.—National Stockman and Farmer.

Killing Cutworms.

Professor Fernald recommends fall plowing, trapping with cut clover soaked in paris green water before planting. After planting poison them with one pound paris green to 50 pounds of bran mixed to a dough with water and a little molasses. A tablespoonful at the base of each plant attracts the worm and saves the plant.

Red Lake Falls Gazette.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER
—BY—
PHIL. A. KAUFER.

Published weekly. Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls.

Subscription, $1.00 per Year

☞All matter for publication in THE GAZETTE must be handed in on or before Tuesday 6 p. m.

It is the Board of Trade. That was the name decided upon for our organization of business men Monday night. The matter of retaining the old name, "Commercial Club," was discussed, but it was finally decided that this being a strictly business organization, with social features not considered, the name Board of Trade would express the purpose of the organization, as one of solid business. Already committees are hard at work on different lines, and we expect shortly to see the fruits of their labor, backed, as their efforts will be, by the united and solidified business sentiment of the city. The history of all great cities in this country is a history of unceasing and intelligent effort on the part of its citizenship. Success must be worked out from within. This has so often and so forcibly been demonstrated in the careers of such places as Minneapolis, Duluth, Seattle, West Superior and the hundred and one other progressive cities of the country whose names are on everybody's tongue, that the need of sustaining a board of trade or some other like organization, goes without saying. The history of Tacoma and Seattle during the past four years, and the way the Klondyke boom was utilized by the one, while the other sat by inactive, letting the great opportunity pass, and with it her rival up the Sound, may be advanced as an object lesson. With practically the same location and the same advantages, merely by the activity and push of her Board of Trade, which worked the Klondike business for all there was in it, Seattle in the course of a couple of years had so far outstripped her rival that it is doubtful if Tacoma will ever be able to catch up. While Red Lake Falls is small and insignificant, compared to these cities, yet our resources are great. They have never been properly fostered or made the most of, or we would stand to-day the leading city in the Red River Valley. It is, however, not too late. The past few years have seen a wonderful growth and awakening here, and with proper effort we can count on rapid advance from now on.

The Beltrami county papers are saying some very nice things about S. A. Swanson, the Populist nominee for representative in this, the 61st legislative district, which embraces Beltrami and Red Lake counties. Mr. Swanson deserves all that is said of him, and more. He is a young man who has risen from the ranks, and the people's interests will certainly be secure if he is elected. Mr. Swanson is the strongest where he is best known, but we are pleased to see the Beltrami county people rallying to his support. The fact is, the Democrats of Beltrami county participated in the convention that nominated him, while they were not represented in the Demoriatic legislative convention held at St. Hilaire last week.

The Crookston Times has a column editorial telling about the crowds that came to hear Bryan, the fine manner in which the railroads handled the people, the beautiful weather that could not have been better if it had been ordered for the occasion—but not a word as to its opinion of Bryan, or of his speech, or of the impression he made on the editor of the Times. Can it be possible that the Times man, too, was disappointed, like all those other fellows the Journal quotes to that effect, in the issue following Bryan's visit?

H. W. Lee, of Thief River Falls, was in the city Monday enroute to St. Paul, where he has three cases before the supreme court. The first case is that of Martin Hughes vs. P. & J. Meehan, a suit which was appealed from the district court in this county, after a verdict was rendered for $1.800 in favor of Hughes, as a balance due on pine purchased by the Meehans from Hughes' uncle, J. C. O'Brien. The second case is an appeal from the decision of the district court awarding Carl Kretzschmar $200 damages for the destruction of the bridge over his dam when the ice went out in the spring of 1897. The third case is an application for a mandamus to compel the city authorities of Thief River Falls to pay a judgment of $154 which Lee secured against the village of Thief River Falls, but which it is claimed was dissolved by the incorporation of the city, following shortly after.

W. A. Schreiter had a peculiar experience Tuesday night. He was driving home after the electric lights had been turned on, and in the centre of the Clearwater bridge his horse began to dance something that resembled a cake walk, and refused to proceed. About this time Dan Linnihan came along, and after a hurried consultation they decided that the horse was sick, and proceeded to unharness the animal. Mr. Linnihan took hold of the bridle and immediately received a shock that nearly knocked him down. They were immediately under the arc light, and it seems that the wet weather had caused the current to leak, and the wet timbers of the bridge served to convey the current, while the horse's shoes furnished the connection, and the poor animal was the receptacle. After unharnessing the horse, the gentlemen succeeded in leading him off the bridge. As soon as he was on terra firma, he was himself again. Just how near the shock came to being fatal is not known, but the incident tends to illustrate the dangers and peculiarities of electricity.

IRON UNDER DULUTH

RICH STRIKE OF ORE IN THE BUSINESS DISTRICT.

Morristown's Disastrous Cyclone—Prohibition Candidates in the Twin Cities—Great Northern's Annual Report—Mine Valuations Raised—News From Around the State.

DULUTH, Oct. 2.—What appears to be an extensive deposit of iron ore has been discovered in the heart of the business section of Duluth. It is hard, black ore, running high in iron. The deposit was found by workmen engaged in digging for a basement foundation for the Third avenue side of a part of the First National bank building. One of the most pretentious business blocks in Duluth stands over property that could be developed into an iron mine. The discovery will lead to further explorations in this vicinity. The nearest hard ore mines are at Tower, on the Vermilion range.

STORM KILLS EIGHT.

Tornado Strikes the Village of Morristown, Minn.

MORRISTOWN, Minn., Sept. 25.—A tornado wiped out a portion of this village about 5:30 Monday afternoon, leaving eight dead and several wounded behind it. The death dealing spectre could be seen for several minutes before it reached Morristown, and those in the fields and open country fled for their lives to the nearest shelter.

The saloon of Paul Gatzke was close at hand, and it was soon crowded with fugitives from the elements. The building was torn to shreds by the fury of the storm. Gatzke's son and six other men were killed outright, while six others were seriously injured. The dead are: Henry S. Waite, aged 40; Otto Gatzke, aged 10; Frank Pittman, aged 50; John Rohrer, aged 24; Elmer Brooks, aged 20; Jacob Miller, Jr., aged 23; Jacob Wober, aged 24; John Peterson, aged 20.

The entire property loss was not over $12,000.

Storm Was Very Erratic.

The course of the terrific wind was most erratic. After it destroyed the saloon of Gatzke it passed down the main street of the city without doing the slightest injury to the buildings; then turned to the north, passing between two houses close together; destroyed a huge oak tree; turned east and demolished a barn.

The only buildings in Morristown touched by the cyclone were two barns and the saloon. These were scattered to the four winds.

The first fatality occurred before the village was reached. The storm was first discovered by a farmer who lives four miles from Morristown. He saw the funnel-shaped cloud, and says it was bobbing up and down on its way to the village, and made four descents in the four miles. The farm of John Olsen, a farmer who resides two miles from Morristown, is, as far as can be learned, the first place where any damage was done. Olson's hired man, Peterson, was killed.

MRS. CONGER'S RING.

Placed on Her Finger by the Empress of China.

Mrs. Conger, wife of the American minister to China, who was in town recently, had with her the ring placed on her finger by the dowager empress at the audience granted by her imperial majesty to the wives of the foreign ministers last winter, says Leslie's Weekly. This handsome souvenir of a notable occasion—it was the first time in the history of the celestial kingdom that foreign women were admitted to the imperial city—is a band of virgin gold nearly half an inch broad in front, tapering toward the back, where its open ends lap, making the ring adjustable; exquisitely carved and ornamented in its broadest part by a large and beautiful pearl, fastened to it by gold wires, which are passed through the base of the gem. This gift, a rare example of Oriental art, is worthy the illustrious donor and much prized by Mrs. Conger, on whom the empress made a most pleasing impression. The wives of the foreign ministers spent on this occasion a whole day in the imperial city and were twice granted interviews with the emperor and empress, who were winning, affable and evidently pleased to receive the distinguished women who had formally requested the privilege of greeting her. Taking each of her guests by the hand she said, smilingly: "We all belong to the same country, the same country," and later on when they were drinking tea, she went among them sipping tea from each cup, which is regarded and was accepted as a delicate compliment. At the parting the empress cordially embraced her visitors and loaded them with presents of carved ivory and silk, expressing her happiness at having had them in her palace.

Big Game.

Speaking of Portuguese, East Africa, Mr. Grogan, the African explorer, says that the quantity of game to be seen there is almost incredible. Crossing the great plain just as the waters were falling and the new grass growing, over 40,000 head of game, mainly blue wildebeeste, were seen from one point; and during a stay of five months, besides many fine heads of buffalo and various specimens of antelope, seventeen lions were shot by the exploring party and five cubs captured alive, three of which are now disporting themselves in Regent's Park, London. The mountain chiperoni, previously only visited by Messrs. Harrison and Kirby, the big game hunters, was explored, and it was found that the natives of the neighborhood, who have a supreme contempt for the Portuguese, their nominal masters, are possessed of domestic swine and pigeons, and cultivate the pineapple and rice as well as millet and maize.

Napoleon Used Bran.

British critics of the Boers are fond of asserting that the sturdy Transvaalers use little soap. This may be true or not. Even if true, there is plenty of precedent. The Japanese, the most cleanly people in the world, rarely use soap. The Russians use vapor baths for cleanliness' sake. Rough inside clothing cleanses the skin. There are doctors who have cured skin diseases by insisting upon their delicate patients abandoning silk underwear and using very coarse stuff instead. Napoleon, whose hands were good to model and beautifully white, used bran and lemon juice and no soap, unless to shave. In England, on account of coal smoke and smut, soap is more needed than in countries with clear air. Many fashionable ladies of today, who would be much offended if they were called barbarous or uncivilized, never use soap. They grease themselves with vaseline and such stuff and carefully rub it all off again.

A Chinaman on a Wheel.

According to the Chinese habit of doing most things backward, a visitor in Shanghai says he fully expected to see the first Chinese cyclist he came across pedal backward. "To our astonishment," he wrote, "he rode forward in the proper manner. His attire was such as is not easily forgotten. The baggy trousers were hauled up over the knees, disclosing a pair of shiny sticks swathed in dishrags or something. This was done to prevent his trousers from tearing in the chain. Bare feet on rubber pedals, a big yellow balloon shirt, bulging out like the spinnaker of a racing yacht, and a flying pigtail under a small tin can of a cap topped by a button. He was a wealthy merchant, we are told, and looked as if wheeling agreed with him in spite of his clothes."—Buffalo News.

England's oldest actor, James Doel, has just passed another birthday, his 97th, and is still hearty, although he has retired from the management of the inn of which he was landlord until a few months ago. He made his first appearance upon the stage of the Plymouth theater in "The Turnpike Gate" when Queen Victoria was little more than a baby. He says that he remembers seeing the first Napoleon as a prisoner on the Bellerophon.

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

A Golden Dawn.

. way, Lady Fraser caused a little scene about a spray of apple blossoms that she had gathered. She came into the dining-room at luncheon-time, her face bright with the fresh morning air, her eyes brilliant as the sunshine itself, the spray in her hands.

"Look," she said, to the gentlemen who crowded round her—"was there ever such a beautiful spray as this?"

She held it so that all might see the dainty exquisite color; and the picture of that dark-eyed woman, with the spray of apple blossoms in her hand, was one never to be forgotten by those who saw it. They listened, too, in wonder; she had so many pretty fancies about it. She could say a hundred quaint and picturesque things where another would have been silent.

"To whom shall I give it?" she said, looking round with dark, laughing eyes. "Who deserves it most?"

Each gentleman urged his claim; Alan alone said nothing. She turned to him with a smile.

"You have not spoken," she said, "I will give you the prize."

Their eyes met as their hands met, while he took the spray of apple blossoms from her.

There was more than one look of wonder, more than one significant smile. It was so well known that Alan was to marry Hyacinth that more than one curious glance sought her face, and saw that it had grown pale. She laughed the impression away; after all, it was not Alan's fault that this dark-eyed woman admired him; who could help it? She told herself that she ought to be proud of it; she said to herself that she would never be jealous.

Lady Fraser found out that afternoon that there was no voice blended so well with her own as the young squire's; they had been trying a duet, and she had said to him, in an ecstacy of delight:

"What a superb voice you have, Mr. Branston, and how strange that it should blend so perfectly with mine! Do try some duets with me, will you?"

"I shall be only too pleased," said Alan, for whom her ladyship's contralto had a wonderful charm.

The result was that the hour before dinner, always hitherto appropriated by the young lovers to themselves, was spent with Lady Fraser, who sung like a siren; while Hyacinth sat in her dressing-room trying to understand the terrible pain that was eating her heart away.

What was it? Alan loved her—what could it matter whether he sung with Lady Fraser or not? He was not in the least changed to her.

One evening, just before dinner, she went into the drawing-room. She had generally been first there, and Alan had been accustomed to join her; he did so, he said jestingly, to see if the flowers in her hair were all right. This evening, on entering suddenly, she saw Lady Fraser leaning back in her chair, diamonds shining in her dusky hair and a pomegranate blossom on her white breast, and Alan bending over her, talking earnestly to her. She could not discern that it was a mere scene which Lady Fraser had put upon the stage, as it were, for her benefit. She had called Alan to her side, and was questioning him about Elmsthorpe Grange, when Hyacinth saw him talking so earnestly. She hesitated for half a moment, while her fair young face grew pale. Lady Fraser looked up with a gleam of triumph in her eyes. Hyacinth said, gently—

"I beg pardon; I hope—"

She had no time to finish her sentence; two or three others entered, and she walked to the other end of the room, where no one could see the pain she could not control.

Through some witty, playful nonsense Lady Fraser had her chair placed next to Alan during dinner, and the little anecdotes she told him were so bright and clever that he allowed her almost to engross his attention. It was after that that Lady Rosedene made the fatal mistake of speaking to Hyacinth about the widow, and so bringing the jealousy which had until now laid dormant, into terrible, active, fiery life.

"Hyacinth," said the kind-hearted mistress of Dene Hall, "I want to speak to you. Why, child, you are losing your beautiful color! You look like a white hyacinth indeed! You must not be jealous of Lady Fraser."

The blue eyes raised to her face had something in them of intense pain.

"I am not jealous, Lady Rosedene," she said; but the keen ears detected the ring of pain in the clear young voice. Lady Rosedene went on.

"No one thinks of what Lady Fraser does or says: if any one else did the same things, people would be shocked. She is a thorough flirt. I believe that she could no more see a nice man without trying to make him like her than a cat can see a nice plump little sparrow without wishing to eat it. There is no sincerity about her; her flirtations never last. Were I in your place, I should take no notice of her."

"Then you really think she is flirting with Alan, Lady Rosedene?"

Her ladyship was rather discomposed by the very straightforward question.

"I think, my dear, she is trying to do so; but I do not think she will succeed. Alan loves you too much to think of any one else."

"He did love me—he does love me!" said the girl; but her voice had the ring of despair in it.

"I should laugh at it," continued Lady Rosedene—"not take it seriously. Lady Fraser devotes herself to the nicest man in the house, no matter who he may be. Alan is the nicest man here."

"But he is mine!" said Hyacinth.

"Certainly. I know he is, and always will be. He cares nothing about Lady Fraser; but he cannot be rude to her. Take my advice, Hyacinth, and do not be jealous."

"I will not," said the poor child; "I am not."

"You have no cause," declared Lady Rosedene; "if I saw you had, I should be the first to interfere—you know that."

But even Lady Rosedene's faith was somewhat shaken that evening, when she saw Alan and Lady Fraser singing together.

"Gertrude is cruel," she said. "She cares nothing for the squire. Why should she make that poor child unhappy? I shall speak sharply to her, if this goes on."

Lady Rosedene had no fear of Alan's loyalty; she had no doubt of his truth and constancy to Hyacinth; but she could not bear to see the sweet face lose its brightness and the tender eyes their light.

Little scenes that were nothing to the outsiders, yet which were full of tragedy to those interested, passed continually. One lovely morning in the middle of May the guests were out on the terrace, the widow, as usual, in the center of a brilliant laughing group. Alan and Hyacinth were near her; and she was pretending to read the character of each person present by the flower that he or she admired. She made some wonderful "hits"—above all when Captain Clifton said that his favorite flower was the poppy. The character of a brave but reckless soldier which she drew from that was clever in the extreme. Alan listened with wonder. Presently she turned to him.

"What is your favorite flower, Mr. Branston?" she asked.

He laughed as he replied:

"My allegiance is divided between two, and they are very different."

"What are they?" she asked.

"The white hyacinth and the blue corn-flower," he replied.

She laughed the low, silvery laugh which was like a chime of bells.

"The fact that you are divided between two shows that you prefer neither. Your favorite flower shall be a spray of apple blossom; from that I will sketch your character;" and she proceeded in a few picturesque words to give such a description of Alan, with such happy "hits," that every one was amused—except Hyacinth. She tried to reason with herself, to believe there was nothing in it; but the hot fire of jealousy was burning her very heart away. She withdrew silently from the laughing group, and Alan was so deeply engrossed by Lady Fraser's brilliant wit that he did not miss her.

He found Hyacinth an hour afterward in the garden.

"My darling," he said, "why did you leave me? I never saw you go away."

He sat down by her, and drew the fair troubled face near to his own.

"Alan," she asked, "do you really love me?"

"What a question to put, when we are to be married so soon!" he replied.

"But do you really love me better than any one else?" she pursued.

"Yes—ten thousand times better. I love you with all my heart and soul. I have no thought, no wish, no desire, no hope, that does not begin and end in you, Hyacinth."

"Then," cried the girl, "why do you torture me? Oh! Alan, if you love me, why torture me?"

He looked at her in amazement.

"I torture you, Hyacinth!" he exclaimed. "Why, my darling, I would not hurt a hair of your dear head! How do I torture you?"

"You do not understand," she said, with a bitter cry; and, rising, she left him, lest he should see the tears she could not restrain.

CHAPTER XII.

Alan soon forgot Hyacinth's words. He was of a singularly bright and happy temperament. He had a certain vague idea that all women had highly strung nerves, and were never to be properly understood. When Hyacinth said anything that was not quite comprehensible to him, he attributed the want of clearness to the fact that she belonged to the sex supposed to be swayed by feelings without reason.

He wondered a little sadly and a little gravely at the word "torture." What could the child mean, when every hair of her head was dear to him, and he worshipped the ground on which she stood?

It was one of Lady Fraser's fancies never to recognize the engagement between the two lovers. She never alluded to it. She never made even the faintest comment upon it. She gave no sign of having ever heard about it. She took no notice when others mentioned it. If any allusion were made to the coming marriage, she affected to misunderstand it.

More than once Hyacinth found herself wondering whether she knew of the engagement or not. Surely she did not; though they called her a flirt, she must have some notion of honor, and no honorable woman would ever seek the admiration of another woman's fiance. When Lady Rosedene wished to speak to Alan, or took him in any way from Hyacinth, she always made some laughing apology. When Lady Fraser asked him to sing with her, or to take her round the grounds, or to read to her, as she often did, she never affected to think that Hyacinth was in the least concerned.

And, as she found that Alan fell easily into the net spread for him, she became more and more encroaching. She totally ignored Hyacinth, and openly claimed Mr. Branston. If some of the guests proposed going out for a drive, she always asked him to drive her; if any were walking, and he was with them, she chose him as her companion; if the evening was fine, she invited him to stroll around the grounds with her.

Alan was slightly impatient at first. Sometimes he excused himself, and went away with Hyacinth. Sometimes he was irresolute, and a witty jest from the beautiful siren brought him to her side—a constant fire of witticisms kept him there. She was kind to Hyacinth in a cold, formal way, but never mentioned Alan to her.

The others looked on—Lady Rosedene with vexation and impatience; the rest with amusement.

One day Hyacinth, passing the library windows, which opened upon the terrace, saw Lady Fraser seated in the deep bay window; a dark head was bending over her, and just as Hyacinth went by she saw Alan take the white jeweled hand and kiss it.

It was not much perhaps to kiss the hand of a beautiful woman; and she could not tell that Lady Fraser had tempted him—drawn him into doing it—by showing him one of her rings, and leaving her warm, soft hand in his.

It was no wish of Alan's—he had no desire to kiss any hand save Hyacinth's; but, when she left it in his own, with a plain invitation in her eyes, he was but a mortal man, and he kissed it. There was not much in the action; but it shot with deadliest pain through the girl's loving heart; it smote her with bitterness like death; her face paled; her lips trembled, she looked like one whose heart had suddenly been transfixed with a sharp sword.

She went on her way—she was taking a message to the head gardener about some flowers that Lady Rosedene wanted—but over the brightness of the May day a cloud had fallen; a funeral pall lay over the gold of the laburnum and the purple of the lilacs; a dark mist hid the budding roses and the lily leaves; the birds seemed suddenly to have changed their notes. What was the fiery, horrible pain that made her heart bleed?

She went on quickly. She wanted to be alone to think over what she had seen. She gave the message to the gardener, who looked at her in amazement—her face was white and her lips trembled. Then she went from the park into the woods, where she could be alone and sob out her pain. If she had known that Alan was searching everywhere for her, with hot impatience in his heart against the widow, she would have gone to him.

What bewildering pain it was! She flung herself down, hiding her white face and burning tears in the long soft grass. The memory of that kiss was a burning pain; it tortured her. How was she to bear it? Was his love so light that a few glances from dark eyes and a few smiles from rosy lips could take his heart from her?

The white hands were clinched; the pretty lips trembled with deep-drawn passionate sobs. How could she bear it? She loved him so well. Why should this dark-eyed woman come between them? Why should she woo him with soft voice?

"He is mine!" she said, raising her tearful face to the sky. "Why should she try to take him from me? He is mine."

The fever of jealousy that burned the loving soul grew cool in the rain of bitter tears; but the pain remained. How it tortured her!

Presently she returned to the house. It so happened, as ill-fortune would have it, that Alan had overtaken Lady Fraser on the lawn, and Hyacinth saw them enter the house together. As a matter of course, she thought they had spent the morning together, while she had been weeping her heart out in the wood. The sight of them entering the house together made her grow faint.

The bell was ringing for luncheon. She had only just time to remove all traces of tears from her face and hasten to the dining room. The widow and Alan were side by side; but a chair had been left for Hyacinth next to her lover. She took it; but it was a mere farce for her to pretend to eat.

Alan was kind to her—he attended to all her wants; but he was laughing the whole time at some absurd anecdote that Lady Fraser was telling him. Hyacinth could not eat, but she did not wish to draw attention to herself. She contrived to keep up appearances, and joined in the discussion about a ball that Lady Rosedene had resolved upon giving. But her voice seemed to her as though it came from a long way off. It was forced and unnatural.

More than once she found Lady Rosedene's eyes fixed anxiously on her; and then she tried to rally; but it was in vain. The sting of her pain was too bitter. How was she to bear it?

On the same day Alan asked her to go down to the lake-side with him, and she did so. They sat down upon the green bank that sloped gently down the clear lake.

"Hyacinth," cried the young squire, suddenly, "let me look at your face. Why, my darling, what is the matter? Your eyes are quite dim. What is wrong? You do not look happy. And yet you must be happy. You cannot be otherwise."

"I am not happy. Oh, Alan," cried the girl, "do you not see that my heart is bleeding—not pained, not aching, but bleeding? Can you not see it—you who love me so well?"

He looked at her in utter wonder.

"No," he said. "What is it, my darling? Have I displeased you?"

"No," she answered; and he saw that there was mortal pain on her face. "'Displease' is not the word. You torture me. Oh, Alan, give up Lady Fraser!"

He repeated the words in wonder.

"Give up Lady Fraser! Why, my darling, what have I to do with her? She is nothing to me."

"She talks to you; you sing with her; you kiss her hand. I saw it. Oh, Alan, it is killing me! You must give her up."

"I have nothing to give up," he replied. "I hope you are not jealous, Hyacinth? I do not like jealous women."

"She causes me nothing but pain," said the girl, earnestly. "But I see it is not your fault. She seeks you."

"Yes, I think she likes to talk to me," he answered, little dreaming of the bitter anguish his words would cause her. "You see, she is a clever woman, and I understand her."

"Give her up, Alan, for my sake—because it makes me so unhappy to see you with her."

"My darling," said the young lover, gravely, "while we are in the world, we must do as the world does. Because a lady happens to be young and beautiful, and to show, as Lady Fraser does, a decided preference for my society, I cannot be rude to her. I must give laugh for laugh, jest for jest."

"Give her up, Alan. Tell her you are going to marry me, and have not time to spare to her."

"My darling, I cannot; every one would laugh. They would say that I was under petticoat government."

"But it is for my happiness," said the girl. "Sometimes, when she looks into your eyes and smiles it seems to me as though my heart were burning. For my sake, Alan—"

"I have never wronged you, even in thought, Hyacinth," he interrupted. "I would do anything on earth to please you; but, my darling, I cannot make myself a subject of laughter. I promise to keep out of the fair widow's way; do not ask me to make myself the mark for everybody's wit. Let us talk about something more pleasant."

And he forgot the subject, while she suffered unutterable pain. But that evening, when Lady Fraser asked him to sing, the young squire excused himself; he was going to play at chess with Miss Vane.

The widow gave a glance at the fair face of the girl whose heart she was wounding for her own amusement.

"You have been talking to your lover about me, ma belle," she said to herself; "but you shall pay dearly for every word!"

CHAPTER XIII.

Lady Fraser began to be interested. She liked the young squire better than she had liked any one yet, and there was a certain piquant pleasure in watching the pained ... e of the young girl. For once the biter was bitten. She had begun by playing at love, and she ended by learning to love the man who was so solemnly promised to another woman.

After she had found that out she delighted in torturing her young rival; to see the fair young face blanch, the white lips tremble, and a sudden quiver of pain pass over it, was a pleasure to her. Yet she she was so clever and so cunning that she contrived to accomplish all this without attracting attention, or drawing down upon herself the displeasure of others.

One afternoon, by some strange chance, she found herself alone with Hyacinth. It was a golden opportunity, and one not to be lost. Lady Fraser walked aimlessly up and down the room; then, as though an idea had suddenly occurred to her, she said, half to herself, half to Hyacinth:

"I wonder where Mr. Branston is? I wish he would sing with me for half an hour."

Looking up at her, Hyacinth saw a flash of fire and mischief in the dark, lustrous eyes. She spoke without thinking.

"Lady Fraser," she said, "do you know that I am going to marry Mr. Branston? We are to be married in July."

She trembled as she spoke; it seemed to her as though with these few words she must crush her rival; but, to her surprise, Lady Fraser laughed a low, gentle laugh, with a touch of scorn in it.

"Indeed!" she said. "But July is not here yet; and there is 'many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip'."

"There will be no slip for me!" rejoined Hyacinth, hotly.

"I hope not," laughed Lady Fraser; "but it is wise not to make too sure of anything in this world. Those who trust, for instance, in a man's love, trust in shifting sands. I am going to sing; if Lady Rosedene wants me, tell her I am in the music-room with Mr. Branston."

A few minutes afterward Hyacinth heard a stream of music filling the house. She did not wait to discover whether her lover's voice was blending with the magnificent contralto. She went to her room and buried her face in the pillows to shut out the sound.

"She is stealing his heart from me!" sobbed the girl.

From that hour the very madness of jealousy seemed to take possession of her; her pain became intolerable; she lost all the sweet childish grace and softness that had been her great charm. She was always angry, suspicious, or silent. The light had gone from her life; and Alan, vexed and impatient at the change in her, was often displeased, simply because he did not understand. Lady Fraser did her best to make matters worse. She said many things in the young girl's presence which she would have not dared to say to others.

One evening Hyacinth was with Lady Rosedene; they were walking slowly amongst the budding roses, and suddenly they saw Lady Fraser crossing the lawn with Alan by her side. The very sight seemed to turn the girl's blood cold.

"Look, Lady Rosedene!" she cried. "There is Alan—he is with Lady Fraser again. She will take him away from me, I am sure; see how she smiles at him, how she looks at him."

Lady Rosedene looked in alarm at the girl—her face had suddenly grown livid, her eyes were dim with despair.

"My dear Hyacinth," she said, "do not look like that."

With a convulsive gasp the girl clung to her arm.

"Lady Rosedene," she cried, "she will take my lover from me—I am sure she will. She is luring him away."

"She ought to be ashamed of herself," said Lady Rosedene, honestly indignant. "I wish she had never come to Dene Hall."

The madness of passion seemed to have taken possession of Hyacinth. A crimson color flushed her face, an angry light shone in her eyes, all her gentleness and sweetness vanished. Under the influence of her terrible jealousy, she was like one transformed. Lady Rosedene never forgot that awful change; it was the first time she had ever been brought face to face with the dreadful reality of human passion.

"She will take him from me," said the girl, in low, despairing tones; "and he is all I have in the world. I wish she was dead!" she cried. "Why should she seek to take him from me?"

"My dear Hyacinth, you must not say such things," remonstrated Lady Rosedene "You do not mean them."

"I do mean them!" cried the unhappy girl. "If she takes my lover from me, I will kill her!"

Then the wild, passionate words died in a burst of tears. Lady Rosedene tried her best to soothe her, but to Hyacinth it seemed as though her soul had been seared.

Perhaps Alan was not altogether free from blame. He might, as he expressed it, have kept out of Lady Fraser's way; but her evident admiration flattered him. More than once, when he found Hyacinth with a tragic face, and eyes dim with tears, he muttered words that were by no means complimentary to the charming widow; but also more than once, when he found Hyacinth sad and silent, or ready to taunt him about Lady Fraser, he showed his independence by going straight to Lady Fraser's side.

So things went from bad to worse, and there seemed little hope of any improvement. Lady Rosedene resolved to speak to the beautiful coquette, who was risking the happiness of two lives merely to gratify her own vanity. She resolved to do or say something which should shorten Lady Fraser's visit.

"I have never felt jealous in all my life," said Lady Rosedene to herself; "but if jealousy can change any one as that beautiful, happy, loving child is changing, it must be hard to bear."

It was hard to bear. Hyacinth tried to trample it down, but it rose again with a thousand tongues of flame, and seemed to infold her. It poisoned every breath of the sweet summer air; it poisoned the food she ate; it killed all sweet sleep; it destroyed all rest. It was like a corroding poison eating her very heart away. There was no brightness, no beauty left in her life.

She was weighing evidence about Alan. She said to herself a hundred times over that if he really found that he liked Lady Fraser best she would give him up, and then tried to imagine what her life would be without him, and found that it held nothing for her but despair and death.

More than once Lady Fraser stung her into the madness of pain, and she had cried aloud that she wished her rival dead. With many additions the words were passed from one to another, and the guests said such passion was dangerous.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in my back and sides, no appetite, gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately a friend advised trying Electric Bitters; and to my great joy and surprise the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. BRYAN DAY.

THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER ADDRESSED THOUSANDS AT CROOKSTON.

SPECIAL TRAINS CARRY MANY FROM RED LAKE COUNTY.

The following account of the Crookston meeting appeared in the Minneapolis Tribune:

Crookston, Minn., Sept. 30.

Friday was a prosperous day for the Bryan party, and the winding up at Crookston last night was a perfect climax of a day which had begun with steady growing crowds, this city, in fact, outdid all others in the welcome extended by the Democrats to their favorite son.

The crowd at Fargo had been large, at Grand Forks, it was larger, at Crookston it was immense. It was without doubt the greatest political demonstration ever known in the Valley.

Gov. Lind and the Democratic state candidates had thousands in the afternoon and it seemed that every man and women had remained in the city for the Bryan meeting, while additional thousands poured in continually from surrounding points on special trains.

The result was an evening at which more than 10.000 people listened to the Nebraskan spell-binder, and many thousand more went away when they found they could not even get standroom.

The Bryan train was twenty minutes late, arriving here, but the crowd at the depot was patient and recieved the guest enthusiastically.

OPEN AIR MEETING.

The meeting was held in the open air at the high school grounds, the platform being erected at the side of the building.

The grounds are on a high plateau and therefore the capacity was limited. Mayor Nat Campbell lost no time in introducing Mr. Bryan who was fanit from the exertion of the struggle up the steep hill approaching the spearker's stand.

The crowd was simply tremenduous. Nothing like it has ever been seen in the Red River Valley. To the front of the speakers' stand as far as the eye could reach aided by numerous electric lights and hundreds of torches in the hands of the marchers, Mr. Bryan began his speech with thanks to Gov. Lind for having drawn the crowd and said be was glad the people had not had an opportunity to leave the city since.

He complimented Mr. Lind highly, and declared that if the people of the state did not re-elected him it would simply demonstrate that they did not deserve a good governor.

ATTRACTS CLOSE ATTENTION.

From the outset Mr. Bryan was closely listened to, orderly applause greeting his sallies of humor.

He tackled the trust question after remarking his audience had sufficient knowledge upon the financial question. As to trust he quoted Mark Hanna as saying that there was no trusts and in a sarcastic sally declared that the public would never send Mark Hanna to look for the trusts.

Hanna, he said, that there were no trusts again that they were the natural outgrowth of business conditions and thirdly that the public should not mind the trusts as the Republicans would take care of them.

"Think of the humor of that." said he. Prosperity as an issue be ridiculed, calling attention to a reverse in business condition in Ohio and other states.

He declared that the Republicans had substituted a full dinner pail for the declaration of Independence.

MAN LIKE A HOG.

Republicans were assured that n man was like a hog. He would squeal when he was hungry and go to sleep when his stomach was full. Never had the campaign been pitched upon so low a level.

Speaking about his farm experience he declared he was not a farmer, but an agriculturalite. He said a farmer was a man who made his money on the farm and spent it in town, while an agriculturalist made his money in town and spent it on the farm.

This appealed strongly to the humor of his audience, which was made up greatly of farmers.

As he proceeded with a violent demonstration of the Republican policy, which he declared aided the trusts, he found that his audience was sympathizing, and that there were cheers and cries of "give it to 'em" from all sides. He declared that the Republicans claimed to believe there were good trusts and bad ones. The good trusts were those which contributed liberally to the campaign funds, and the bad ones were those which did not contribute.

PARTY OF FLOPPERS.

The Republican party used to be one of independent thinkers. Today it was an aggregation of athletes which would turn a summersault when the leaders said "flop." Mr. Bryan then took up the question of imperialism, and covered much the same discussion in earlier speeches.

It is estimated that from the way Mr. Bryan spoke yesterday he spoke to more then 23,000 people in North Dakota, and not less then 10,000 more listened to him at Crookston, a very good size day's work.

The North Dakota committee is entitled to high praise for the excellent management of the day, and it must be added that the Great Northern road had the train on time to the dot. Quite a party of Minnesotaians joined the party at Crookston, bound for Duluth. Among them were P. M. Ringdal, T. J. Knox and S. M Owen, candidates for railway commissioners; M. J. Daly, candidate for congress; Gov. Lind and M. E. Neary, candidate for secretary of state.

TERREBONNE DITCH

DITCH WILL BE SIX MILES LONG---WILL DRAIN 1000 ACRES.

BADGER CREEK WILL BE CONTINUED WHERE IT LOSES ITSELF.

Engineer G. A. Ralph has completed the survey of the new Red Lake county ditch, which will be known as the Terrebonne Ditch. It will be six miles long, four feet deep, twelve feet wide on bottom, and from 24 to 30 feet wide on top, with a fall of seven feet to the mile, the greatest fall of any ditch in the Red River Valley. The Sanders Black River ditch, for instance, has a fall of only four feet. It will cost less per mile and carry a greater amount of water. The Badger ditch, of Polk county, will be connected with this. The combined length will be fourteen miles, and eight thousand acres of land will be drained.

Badger creek, which has its origin in Badger lake, at Erskine, Polk county, is a more important rivulet than would be imagined, draining over forty thousand acres. On section 26, Terrebonne township, the creek loses itself, on the low, flat lands, having no regular channel, gathering its waters in two separate streams, on the farms of Leon Laurent and Joseph Derocher, and emptying into the Clearwater river, the two mouths being but a short distance apart.

The proposed ditch starts where the creek enters Terrebonne, straightening out the creek itself for a short distance, and continuing in a northwesterly direction to the coolie at Leon Laurent's place, where connection is made with the channel of the Creek.

In choosing Engineer Ralph to do the work, County Surveyor Hagglund has done wisely. Mr. Ralph's reputation is the best assurance that the work has been done thoroughly and well.

County Commissioners' Proceedings.

Pursuant to call dated Sept. 20th, board met in extra session this day.

Meeting called to order by the chairman.

All members present.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County Gentlemen:

We, your committee on construction of county jail, beg leave to report as follows:

On Sept. 18th, 1900, the committee received and opened the following bids for $3,000.00 worth of jail bonds, which was found on the estimates submitted by Architect Strassburger to be the necessary amount of funds needed for the construction of said jail, viz:

First State Bank of Red Lake Falls, Minn., for a 5 per cent. semi-annual interest, 20 year bond. $3030.

Merchants State Bank of Red Lake Falls, Minn., for a 5 per cent. semi-annual interest, 20 year bond $3087.

Trowbridge, Niver & Co, of Minneapolis, Minn., for a 5 per cent. semi-annual interest 20 year bond including blanks. $3165.

Stoddard, Nye & Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., for a 4½ per cent. semi-annual interest 20 year bond, including blanks $3025.

After duly considering all the bids, the committee contracted to sell the bonds to Stoddsrd, Nye & Co.

We then let the contract for supplying the stone, delivered at the jail site, to Otto Zaiser for the sum of $4.50 per cord.

We have also let the contract for the construction of the foundation for the jail, including the concrete under the cells, to Dan Linnihan for the sum of $198.00.

The following bids were received for the construction of the jail above the foundation, viz:

James Brady $1447.
J. J. Rue $1435.
Frank Mageau $1594

After considering all the bids and taking into due consideration the responsibility of the bidders we recommend that the contract be awarded to James Brady.

Respectfully submitted,
K. M. Hansen
Wm. C. L. Demann
J. B. Hebert,
Committee.

Commissioner Hansen offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

As follows:

Thereupon the chairman of the board declared the same carried, and

Whereas this Board did thereupon proceed to procure plans and estimates of the cost of such county jail and submitted the said plans and estimates of the costs of said county jail to the said State Board of Corrections and Charities for suggestions and criticism before the final adoption thereof by this Board, and whereas the suggestions and criticisms of the said State Board of Corrections and Charities in writing in respect to the said plans and estimates of the costs of said county jail were duly filed in the office of the County Auditor of said county of Red Lake on the 19th day of Sept. A. D. 1900, and are now on file in the said office of said County Auditor, and whereas the plans and estimates of the cost of said county jail, modified in accordance with the suggestions and criticism of said State Board of Corrections and Charities, were duly adopted by this Board of County Commissioners on the 2nd day of October, A. D. 1900, and this Board did, on the 2nd day of October, 1900, duly determine and vote to erect such county jail in and for said county of Red Lake at a cost of $3,000, and whereas it is necessary to issue and negotiate the bonds of said county of Red Lake to the amount of Three Thousand Dollars for the purpose of raising the necessary funds for the erection of said county jail, there being no funds for the erection of said jail, there being no funds in the treasury of said county available for that purpose;

Now therefore, be it resolved by the Board of County Commissioners of the county of Red Lake, Minnesota,

That this Board of County Commissioners do forthwith issue and negotiate the bonds of said county of Red Lake, in the state of Minnesota, to the amount of Three Thousand Dollars for the purpose of raising the funds necessary for the construction of a county jail in and for said county of Red Lake, said bonds to be in denominations of $500 each, to be dated October 1st, A. D. 1900, to be made payable October 1st, A. D. 1920, to bear interest at the rate of four and one-half per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, interest to be evidenced by interest coupons attached to said bonds, both principal and interest to be payable at the National Bank of Commerce, in the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and that the chairman of this board of county commissioners and the county auditor of said Red Lake County are hereby authorized, empowered and directed respectively to properly sign and attest and countersign said bonds and the interest coupons thereto attached and to affix to said bonds the official seal of said Red Lake county, and to deliver said bonds to Stoddard, Nye & Co., of Minneapolis, Minnesota, the purchasers of said bonds, upon the payment into the treasury of said Red Lake county by said Stoddard, Nye & Co, of the amount of their bid for said bonds, which said bid is the highest and best bid for said bonds and is far more than the par value of said bonds and accrued interest, and has been and is hereby accepted by this board of county commissioners; that the proceeds of said bonds be placed in the treasury of said county of Red Lake to be used for the purpose of erecting a county jail in and for said county; that said bonds and interest coupons thereto attached may be substantially in the following form (the blanks therein to be properly filled in), to-wit:

The above likeness will be recognized by our readers in Red Lake county as that of Samuel Gibeau, who has so long been a resident of the county, and has held public positions for so many years. He is one of the best known men in the county. Mr. Gibeau's friends are gaining in confidence every day, that he will be elected to succeed himself as register of deeds, which position he has so creditably filled the past term. His peculiar fitness for the position, no less than his strong and admirable personality, are points that are not being lost sight of by the voters.

MAGAZINE BLOWN UP

OVER THREE TONS OF DYNAMITE EXPLODE AT EVELETH.

Not a Piece of Glass Over a Foot Square Left in the Town—Cyclone at Biwabik Results in Death to Nine—Mad Man Runs Amuck at Albert Lea—General State News.

DULUTH, Minn., Oct. 8.—A special to The News-Tribune from Eveleth, Minn., reports one of the largest explosions ever occurring in the state. Seven thousand five hundred pounds of dynamite in the powder magazine at the Spruce mine, about half a mile from town, blew up about 5:30 o'clock. A hole 100 feet square and 25 feet deep marks the spot where the magazine stood. The force of the explosion was so great that there is not a piece of glass over a foot square within a radius of two miles of the mine. Practically every window and mirror in Eveleth was broken, while in saloons all bottled goods were demolished in addition. The loss in the city is estimated at $50.000. The damage done to the Spruce mine was about $3,000, the mine laboratory and warehouses being totally wrecked.

At least 200 people were hurt more or less from being thrown down by the shock or hit by shattered glass. The explosion was plainly felt at Biwabik, 12 miles distant. The cause of the explosion is hard to explain. An unknown man was seen near the magazine a few minutes before it occurred, and it is believed that he was responsible, although that is pure guess work. At any rate the fellow has not been seen since. The only explosion equaling this occurred at Virginia, Minn., in 1894, when the Lake Superior Powder company's magazine exploded, destroying everything within two miles.

NINE ARE DEAD.

Cyclone Kills a Number of People in the Vicinity of Biwabik, Minn.

BIWABIK, Minn., Oct. 8—A severe tornado passed over this place at 4 o'clock. Three people were killed and a number were injured at this place. Mr. and Mrs. Marowitz were found dead, the former being picked up fully a quarter of a mile from where his residence had been. Both bodies were horribly mutilated. William Hilmstrom's skull was fractured and he died later at the hospital.

The damage to property was very heavy. Buildings were torn to pieces and heavy cars lifted from the tracks and carried several hundred feet.

The cyclone passed through a Finlander settlement on Pike river, about two miles north of Biwabik, wiping out an entire family of six, husband wife and four children. Owing to meager advices their names cannot be learned.

LUNATIC RUNS AMUCK.

Officer and One Citizen Badly Injured at Albert Lea.

ALBERT LEA, Minn., Oct. 3.—John Hore, a crazy man, ran amuck on Broadway and shot and probably fatally wounded Policeman Oscar Subby, who attempted to arrest him. Hare held a big crowd at bay and also shot William Jones. A crowd followed Hare down the street, keeping up a perfect fusilade of shots. A rifle bullet through the brain finally brought him down and he cannot live but a few hours. He created a perfect panic on the street and it is remarkable that there were not more shot. Bare has been insane for a number of years, but was considered harmless.

ALBERT LEA, Minn., Oct. 4.—As a result of Tuesday night's shooting here W. H. Jones, proprietor of the Albert Lea House, is dead. The maniac, John M. Hare, who ran amuck in the street, is dying from the wounds inflicted by the citizens who pursued him and filled his body with bullets.

FARMERS LOSE HEAVILY.

Recent Rains Rust Corn and Prevent Fall Plowing.

LA CROSSE, Wis., Oct. 9.—Another severe rain storm, accompanied by a terrific electrical display, struck the Upper Mississippi valley during the night. The principal damage done is to the farmers. The corn is rusting in the shock and fall plowing is at a stand still. Their loss will be heavy. The railroads did not suffer a great deal.

A heavy rain is also reported along the Southern Minnesota road in Minnesota and the Dakotas.

The recent rains have caused tremendous rises on the Chippewa and Black rivers. On the Chippewa river a 14 foot rise is reported and at Black River Falls Black river has risen 12 feet. All this water will reach the Mississippi in a few days. However, it comes too late to help logging operations.

Northwestern Flour Output.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 4.—According to The Northwestern Miller the flour output at Minneapolis last week was 339,875 barrels, against 322,905 barrels for the corresponding week of 1899. Superior-Duluth last week ground 10,900 barrels against 01,910 barrels for the corresponding week of 1890. While flour was not active in the large domestic markets during the week just past, and the export demand was dull, the mills of the country ran heavily and the output was large.

St. Paul Imports Nearly a Million.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 4.—St. Paul, though an inland city, imported in the last fiscal year merchandise valued at nearly $1,000,000. A schedule of the importations shows that nearly every civilized nation has contributed to the St. Paul market and many of them in no small sums. Japan leads in the amount imported, with $322,313, while British Columbia with $43 and Australia with $75 stand at the foot of the list.

MINNESOTA PUBLIC LANDS.

Less Than Five Million Acres Remain Subject to Entry.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—There are 4,696,203 acres of public land left within the borders of Minnesota subject to entry or purchase from the United States. Of this amount more than one-half has been surveyed. About 55 counties in the state have no public land remaining and in some localities there are tracts that will probably never be used for agricultural purposes. Of the more than 50,000,000 acres of public lands originally within the state nearly 42,000,000 acres have been appropriated, while 5,022,298 acres have been reserved for various purposes. Beltrami leads the counties in the acreage of public lands unappropriated, there being 1,381,048 acres still left in that county.

CROP HALF THRESHED.

Elevator Returns From Minnesota and the Dakotas.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 9.—The St. Anthony and Dakota Elevator company of Minneapolis, which has been in receipt of reports from its stations in Minnesota and North Dakota, and a few in South Dakota, regarding the condition of the wheat in shock and stack, has completed its compilation and the report shows that 48 per cent of the wheat in the territory tributary to its stations has been threshed; 18 per cent is still in shock; 34 per cent is in stack, and 44 per cent of the acreage has been plowed. Thirty-nine per cent of the flax remains uncut.

BOERS FOR NORTHWEST.

Two Thousand of Them Will Settle in Minnesota and North Dakota.

CHICAGO, Oct. 5.—Through the efforts of railroads in the Northwest, between 200 and 300 Boers will arrive in this country within the next month. They will take up their residence in North Dakota and Northern Minnesota. They are but the forerunners of 2,000 Boers who are expected to squat on unclaimed land in that part of the country. The Canadian Pacific, the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern roads are back of the deal, and it is said that within a few years promising settlements will have been established in those regions.

LARGE ORE SHIPMENTS.

Total for the Year May Exceed 20,000,000 Tons.

DULUTH, Oct. 6.—It is expected that the ore shipments from the Lake Superior range will reach over 20,000,000 tons this season. The shipments for September are estimated at 3,000,000 tons, which brings the total to Oct. 1 up to 15,500,000 tons, leaving only 4,000,000 tons necessary to reach 20,000,000. If the October shipments are only as large as those of September, this will leave only 1,500,000 tons to be carried in November, and this amount will be exceeded.

MUST AWAIT TRIAL.

Court Refuses to Release Circus Men at Duluth.

DULUTH, Oct. 5.—The six members of the Great Syndicate circus, in jail here charged with rioting at Cass Lake, will have to stay here until next May, when the Cass county grand jury meets. The habeas corpus proceedings begun in their behalf were decided by Judge Cant, and he refused to order their release as they requested. These are the men arrested at Cloquet by the military companies several weeks ago.

100 PER CENT DIVIDEND.

Duluth and Iron Range Pays $3,000,000 on Its Common Stock.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 9.—The Duluth and Iron Range railroad has filed its annual report with the railroad commission. This road declared from its earnings and surplus at the last directors' meeting $3,000,000 in dividends on its common stock, or 100 per cent.

The Duluth and Iron Range has a mileage of 198.18.

TO SELL INDIAN LANDS.

Seventy-four Thousand Acres in Minnesota Placed on the Market.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9.—The secretary of the interior has decided to dispose of the Indian lands ceded to the Chippewas in Minnesota, amounting to 74,125 acres. They consist of pine and agricultural lands adjoining the White Earth reservation.

Curfew a Dead Letter.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 4.—From all indications the curfew law which was passed about a year ago is a dead letter. No arrests have been made under it and competent judges can see but little difference in the number of children seen on the street since the law was passed.

Stephen R. Willard Dead.

SANTA FE, N. M., Oct. 3.—Stephen R. Willard, a prominent attorney of Minneapolis, died here during the day. He came here a week ago for his health.

Drowned Herself and Child.

TWO RIVERS, Wis., Oct. 5.—Mrs. Valentine Rouillier committed suicide by drowning, taking with her her 2-year-old daughter. The bodies were recovered. The cause of the deed is attributed to constant worrying, because her husband intended to take up farming, to which she had a decided aversion.

Judge Stephen F. Barlow Dead.

BARABOO, Wis., Oct. 8. — Judge Stephen F. Barlow, aged 82 years, is dead. Judge Barlow was well known throughout the state, having served in the assembly and senate and being twice elected attorney general.

It is estimated that the recent storm in Texas damaged the cotton to the extent of 400,000 bales. The value is estimated at not less than $20,000,000.

Shorts in October pork were given an unexpected shaking up Friday by the price jumping $2 per barrel, part of it at the rate of 50 cents between the trades.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

The census bureau announces the population of Arkansas as 1,311,564, a gain of 183,385 over 1890.

The secretary of the interior has decided to dispose of the Indian lands ceded to the Chippewas in Minnesota, amounting to 74,125 acres.

As officially announced by the census bureau, the population of the state of New Hampshire is 411,588. In 1890 the population was 370,530, the increase being 35,058, or 9.3 per cent.

This government is preparing to take very decisive steps, it is learned, with a view to bringing Turkey to the prompt performance of its promises and obligations with respect to claims of the United States.

The annual report of the commissioner of the general land office for the fiscal year ending June 30 shows that during the last fiscal year the quantity of public land disposed of amounted to 13,453,887 acres, as against 9,182,413 acres for the preceding year, an increase of over 4,000,000 acres.

THE ANTHRACITE STRIKE.

Individual coal operators have agreed to pay a 10 per cent increase in wages and it is believed the anthracite strike is nearing the end.

Anthracite operators announce that no further concessions will be granted to the striking miners, and that if they do not accept the 10 per cent offer the strike will be fought out.

The anthracite strike situation remains unchanged. The offer of a 10 per cent increase in wages has had no effect on the strikers. President Mitchell will issue a call for a convention of miners to consider the offer.

The Reading company has posted a notice to its employes that, in addition to its offer of a 10 per cent increase, it is willing to enter into arbitration with them relative to any grievances they may have. None of the strikers, however, have yet indicated their intention to return to work.

SCIENTIFIC TOPICS.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

A New Attachment for Bath Tubs, the Invention of a New York Man—An Improved Method of Cutting Mortises—A Remarkable Bird.

A Remarkable New Zealand Bird.

The capture of a fourth specimen of the "takahe," or flightless rail of New Zealand, is regarded as one of the most important events of recent years in ornithology. The capture was effected nearly two years ago, but detailed accounts of the bird have just reached England. The takahe (Notornis hochstetteri) is about equal in size to a goose, but its wings are very small and unlike all of its relatives in other lands, it cannot fly. Its breast is of a rich blue color, and its powerful beak is described as "a large equilateral triangle of hard pink horn," apparently an excellent weapon. The first specimen of the bird was caught in 1849, the second in 1851 and the third in 1879. The new specimen is said to be the finest of all, and $1,500 has been offered for it.

Glass Dissolved in Water.

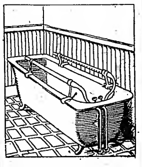
Every kind of glass at a sufficiently high temperature, says Prof. Carl Barus, must eventually show complete solubility in water. Under pressure glass dissolves in water heated to 410 degrees Fahrenheit. Sea-water more than about 660 feet beneath the surface will remain liquid at that temperature, and if it penetrates the earth's crust where the temperature is equally high, it will, apart from the pressure, liquefy the silicates, or glassy rocks. Prof. Barus concludes that at a depth of about five miles, silicates in contact with water are virtually fluid, and that the level of aqueous fusion in the earth is five times nearer the surface than is that of igneous fusion.

The Mystery of Radium.

The substance called radium emits radiations resembling the X-rays without the application of work or energy from external sources, and without appreciable loss of weight. This seems to be inconsistent with the law of the conservation of energy, but the mystery is explained by the calculations of Monsieur Becquerel, which shows that a loss of weight so infinitesimal that in a thousand million years it would amount to no more than a milligram would suffice to account for the observed effects. According to this explanation the emanations from radium consist of material particles. But how infinitely minute must those particles be!

NEW BATH TUB ATTACHMENT.

The shower bath is a luxury which is not found in many homes, partly on account of the expense of the extra space necessary for the apparatus, but it goes without saying that the device here shown will soon find its way into common use. The inventor is William H. Bridgeman, of New York. The apparatus is provided with means for attaching it to the edge of a tub, and connections can be made to the faucets by means of a rubber tube, to force hot or cold water into the pipes. The latter are perforated along the sides, and screw clamps are provided by which they can be adjusted to any desirable angle, throwing the spray either directly on the body of the bather, or causing it to ascend a short distance into the air and fall gently if the direct stream is too harsh for the skin. With this device the bather can rinse the skin without the necessity of refilling the tub with fresh water, and a shower at the proper temperature will prove itself an agreeable feature to the bath.



A Suspended Railroad.

Between the towns of Elberfeld and Barmen in western Germany, a remarkable elevated railroad is nearing completion, while part of it has been in operation for several months. The cars are suspended beneath the superstructure from a single rail on which run motor trucks attached to the car roofs, the motive power being electricity. Each car can accommodate 50 passengers, and the maximum speed, with a train of either two or four cars is 25 miles an hour. The road, which is more than eight miles in length, crosses Wupper river without interruption.

Peculiarity of the Merganser.

The merganser is a species of fish-duck of great beauty of plumage, common in the Adirondacks. Senator George Chahoon, who has studied the birds in this region for many years, notes a habit of the merganser which he thinks is unique, and he is surprised that ornithological writers have not

THE FARMER'S GARDEN.

Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

A Golden Dawn.

The night of the ball came, and great had been the preparations. A ball at Rosedene was one of the most pleasurable events in the country, and this was above all others eagerly looked for. Hyacinth, by her lover's desire, wore a dress of rich, white silk, superbly trimmed with blue cornflowers; a wreath of blue cornflowers lay on the golden hair, and she wore a knot of the flowers at her breast. An exquisite toilet it was, one just suited to her fair spring-like loveliness. She was so pleased with her lover's admiration that something of her former glad young happiness came back to her.

Alan was waiting for her in the hall, and kissed the sweet wistful face that was raised to his.

"How beautiful you look, my darling!" he said. "Now we will have a night so happy that it shall be like a summer dream to us. Let me see your dear face bright and glad as it is now."

They went into the ball-room together, Lady Rosedene watching anxiously. She had seen something in the widow's dark eyes that boded mischief. When Lady Fraser entered the ball-room—which she did an hour later than most of the others—all eyes were turned wonderingly toward her. The beauty of every other woman paled before the fire of hers. Art, elegance and luxury had exhausted themselves in her marvelous costume. She wore a dress of the palest green brocade, so pale as to be almost white; it was elaborately and beautifully trimmed with apple blossoms; and diamonds that shone like dew-drops were scattered over the blossoms. The lovely hues of the flowers were shown to perfection in the wreath on her glossy hair; diamonds shone in it, and a diamond cross sparkled like fire on her breast.

A low cry came from Hyacinth's lips when she saw Lady Fraser's dress. She remembered the scene about the apple blossoms. It seemed to the loving, wounded heart as though her beauty suddenly faded, and the light of her life went out.

Alan evidently understood all that Lady Fraser intended to convey. He laughed when he saw the flowers; he laughed when people teased him; and those who remembered the little scene assured him that he was much honored. He laughed again when Lady Fraser raised her face to his.

"You will dance with the apple blossoms, if you do not with me," she said; and the heart of the girl who loved him stood still with jealous rage, with hot bitter pain.

Once during the evening the two rivals stood together. Lady Fraser said to Hyacinth:

"How well Mr. Branston dances! I am longing for a waltz with him."

"He does not waltz," said Hyacinth, coldly.

"You will see," the widow laughed. "You have forgotten all I told you about lovers' vows. He will waltz with me, I am sure."

Later on he did so; and Lady Rosedene, who was talking to Hyacinth, was startled by the spasm of pain that crossed the fair young face.

When the girl saw that, although the waltz was over, Alan remained talking to Lady Fraser, her jealousy became unbearable.

"Good-night, Lady Rosedene," she said. "I cannot bear it. I shall go home to-morrow, and then I shall suffer no longer. I—I shall kill her if she takes my lover from me!"

The last glimpse that Lady Rosedene and several of the visitors had of her that evening was when she left the ball-room with a pretty blue-and-white shawl thrown round her shoulders. No one knew that she flung the shawl away as she passed through the hall to go to her room.

CHAPTER XIV.

Afterward every detail of that night was remembered—from Hyacinth's passionate cry, "I shall kill her if she takes my lover from me," to the insignificant occurrence that, while the ball was at its height, a stranger had called and asked if Lady Fraser was staying at the Hall. Hearing that she was there, he had said that he would call on the morrow. Long afterward one of the footmen, who was not quite sober at the time, remembered that this stranger had spoken of the size of the Hall and of the situation of the visitor's rooms.

Alan was the first to miss Hyacinth from the ball-room. He went at once to Lady Rosedene, who told him frankly the cause of her absence.

"If she is really cross," he said, "it is of no use of my sending any message to her."

Lady Rosedene looked gravely at him.

"I think you are to blame," she said. "If I were in your place, I should not spend so much time with Lady Fraser."

He laughed carelessly.

"I shall not be much troubled," he replied, "when Lady Fraser's visit ends. She amuses me almost against my own will; but I love my darling."

"Then why vex her?" asked Lady Rosedene, quickly.

"I do not—that is, she ought not to be vexed. She knows I love her, and she ought to trust me," said Alan. "I shall be glad when Lady Fraser is gone; I have had a presentiment of evil ever since she has been here."

The last they saw of Lady Fraser that evening was when she stood in all the brilliant glow of her beauty, talking to Alan. The light from the great chandelier fell on her beautiful face and imperial figure—on her diamonds, her rich dress, and the lovely apple-blossoms. She was talking to him, and saying to herself that she liked him far better than any one she had seen, and that, if it could be managed, she would be the Lady of Elmsthorpe, instead of the child who showed her jealous pain in her very face.

Her dark eyes flashed and her red lips smiled as she bade him good-night. She said good-night also to Lady Rosedene; but the mistress of Dene was not very cordial to her; she could not forget the pain on Hyacinth's face or the despair in her voice.

"Gertrude," she said, somewhat sharply, "do you remember the old saying, 'Do as you would be done by?'"

Lady Fraser laughed a careless, musical laugh.

"I remember many quaint old sayings, but I never apply them to myself," she answered; and, as she hastened away, some of the apple-blossoms that had been fastened to her dress fell to the ground.

"They are all rather cross with me," said Lady Fraser to herself, as she reached her own room. "I do not care. I like him, and I shall win him for myself if I can."

It was long after midnight, and the whole household was wrapt in slumber. There was no sign left of the brilliant ball; the last carriage had driven away, the tired dancers, and the still more tired servants had gladly sought rest. Lady Fraser alone felt no fatigue; she was full of high spirits and exultation; her brain seemed to burn with the different plans that came into her mind. Her maid took the jewels from her hair and her breast, and then she opened her window that the cool air might take the fever from her.

As she leaned her head out in the moonlight, a man standing watching uttered a low cry.

"It is herself!" he exclaimed. "Now I shall see."

She did not remain there many minutes, but quickly closed her window, still smiling to think what she would and could do.

She had been for some time moving quietly about her room when a noise as of some one throwing sand or gravel at the window attracted her attention. At first she thought it was fancy. But it was repeated again and again. Such signals could not have been quite unknown to her, for she suddenly grew deadly pale.

She went to the window and opened it. The man then stood underneath. He looked up, and in the moonlight their eyes met.

"You know me?" he said briefly.

A low cry of wonder and dismay came from her lips.

"Is it you, Andrea?" she asked.

"Yes; I want to speak to you; you must come to me. Do you hear? I make no prayer; I say only you must come to me."

"I cannot," she answered, with a low moan. "I cannot get out of the house."

"You must—I repeat that you must. I have looked half England over to find you, and now I will see you—now—here—to-night."

"I cannot, Andrea. Be reasonable; come to-morrow. I dare not," she moaned.

"I say come. You need not fear; only cowards fear. You think I shall hurt you; on my honor I will not. You know my power over you—do not hesitate. If you come now and speak with me, you shall return to your room unhurt, but I must have speech with you. I am a desperate man. If you refuse, I shall wake up the house and declare before all that which you know and I know. Quick—your choice?"

"I will come," she said.

She did not wait even to gather together the long, dusky hair that lay over her shoulders. She opened the door of her room, which was near the grand staircase, and looked out cautiously. There was no sound, nothing but darkness and silence. She knew of a side door which opened with but little trouble into the grounds. If she could use that, she could get out in silence and no one would hear her.

Cautiously she made her way down stairs. In the hall lay a blue and white shawl. She lifted it, and threw it over her head, then noiselessly unfastened the door and went out.

The cool, sweet night air greeted her. Passing round the western end of the house, she met the stranger face to face. He seized her with almost savage force.

"I knew you would come," he said. "I am a desperate man. You lured me on to love you. You laughed at me when I asked you to marry me. I have searched half England to find you; and now I shall never leave you until you promise to be my wife. You may look at me. You think me mad. I may be. I have been mad, they say, since you played with me. But I am sane now, and you must listen to me."

She foresaw that she had a hard battle to fight, and that she must do the best she could.

What took place between them no one ever knew. What was the secret of his power over her no one ever understood. She walked with him for more than an hour, and then she raised a white, tired face to his.

"You will let me go now, Andrea," she said. And he watched her as she re-entered the house.

The beauty and exultation had all left her now. She undressed hurriedly, and flung herself, tired in body and mind, upon the bed.

She drew the blue-and-white shawl from her head, and folded her hands in it. Soon the dark eyes closed, and the beautiful woman slept. Soon dreams gave her back happiness, and she smiled while her hands lay warm and still, and folded in the pretty shawl.

What that night saw only heaven knew; but one thing was quite certain—day never dawned for her.

* * * * * * * * *

It was late the next morning when the household began to stir. Lady Fraser's maid, Julie, waited some time before she knocked at her mistress's door, and then there came no answer. She went away thinking that her mistress slept and did not wish to be disturbed. But the morning wore on, and she grew anxious at last. She could hear no sound, and could get no answer. She went in search of Lady Rosedene, who smiled when she heard the maid's story, but finally shared her anxiety. They went together to the widow's room, but all endeavors to rouse the sleeper were ineffectual.

"We must have the door opened," said Lady Rosedene, with a pale, scared face. "What can be the matter?"

They fetched the butler, an old confidential servant of Lady Rosedene's, and he broke open the door.

Then followed the wailing and shrieking of women, speedily succeeded by the horror and anger of men. For the beautiful Lady Fraser lay dead, stabbed to the heart—stabbed in such a manner that she must have suffered little pain. Her closed hands clutched Hyacinth Vane's shawl, and to the fringe of the shawl was fastened one of the blue cornflowers that she had worn on her dress. The servants tried to remove the shawl, but the dead hands clasped it with the cling of death.

To one and all the same awful thought came. The young girl who had threatened her rival's life had surely accomplished her end; and there in the dead woman's hand, by the will of heaven, was left the proof of her guilt. Her own words rang in all ears—"I shall kill her if she takes my lover from me!"

CHAPTER XV.

Dene Hall was filled with consternation. Colonel Halle undertook the superintendence; Lady Rosedene was quite incapacitated. All that she could say was, "I knew evil would come of it."

Even in the midst of her sorrow and dismay, she had time to reflect that her prestige was ended—that never again could people speak with satisfaction of her home. A murder had been committed there—a beautiful woman had been cruelly slain in the middle of the night. Instead of being the admiration of the whole county her home would henceforth be shunned as the scene of a most cruel tragedy.

Colonel Halle, by dint of hard words, brought her back to reason.

"It is clearly," he said, "a case of murder, and the laws of the land must be obeyed; no one must touch the body or enter the room."

The last injunction came too late. When the rush of terrified women came, they disturbed the ornaments on the toilet table, and no one remembered whether the window was found open or shut; all that was known was that the dead woman grasped the shawl in her hands as though she had grasped it in her last struggle.

Colonel Halle forbade its removal. He sent away the weeping women, he kept a watch on the chamber of the dead. He was a strong man and a grave soldier, but his eyes filled with tears as he picked up from the ground the beautiful spray of apple-blossom that had been worn on the white breast now stilled for evermore.

Very quickly the detectives came, and the whole ghastly machinery of the law was set in force.

No one ever knew who first uttered the fatal words.

"She must be guilty; her shawl was in the dead woman's hand."

Several guests of her own sex, with some of the women-servants, sought Miss Vane. No one could tell in the afterdays who was the first to enter the room where the girl stood in her white dressing-robe, her hair falling like a veil over her, her face colorless as that of the dead woman's, a terrible fear in her eyes, her white lips dumb. She leaned back against the wall, with her hand held out, as though to ward off some terrible blow. Who entered first, who said first that she was guilty, who revealed that she had said over and over again, that she would slay Lady Fraser if she took her lover from her, who repeated the last words that she had uttered in the ball-room, when she had hastened away with the blue-and white shawl round her shoulders, which was now clasped in the dead woman's hand, was never known.

The storm gathered, and the young girl stood there breasting it alone. Her own sex shrunk from her with scorn, with horror in their eyes, with fear in their faces. The room seemed full of whispers.

"She is so young," said one; "could she be so cruel?"

"She looks so fragile," remarked another; "it is a wonder that she possessed the strength."

"Hate is strong," was the answer; "and she hated her rival because she was jealous of her."

And all the time they spoke these words Hyacinth stood dumb and motionless, with unutterable woe in her white face.

She never moved, until attracted by the crowd, Alan entered the room and saw her, the mark for all suspicion. She sprung to him, regardless of who saw or heard her; she flung herself upon his breast; she clasped her arms around his neck.

"Oh, Alan, save me!—help me! Send them away; they say I killed her!" And the words were wailed out in a voice that filled some of them with pain.

He gathered her to him; he kissed the sweet, despairing face.

"No one shall say so, my darling; I will take you away. No one thinks you did it; it is women's foolish talk. You shall go home; I will take you. Leave the room," he said to the ladies and women servants who had gathered there. "Hyacinth, get ready to return to your father. I will stand outside here at the door and see that no one molests you." He raised one white, cold hand to his lips and kissed it. "My darling," he added, "those sweet hands would not knowingly take the life of anything."

But, when she tried to arrange her dress her hands trembled so that one of the women-servants had to help her. She was not long, however, before she was ready; but, when Alan led her from the room, he was stopped by a stern-faced officer of the law.

"That lady cannot leave the house, sir. I have a warrant for her apprehension of the murder of Lady Fraser."

"You are mad," said Alan, "or, rather, those who granted such a warrant are mad."

The officer was immovable.

"I am very sorry, sir; I must obey orders. The lady cannot leave this house. When she does it will be to go to Ulverston jail."

Those who saw the scene that followed will never forget it. The officer produced the warrant for Hyacinth's apprehension—he had ridden to the nearest magistrate for it; and the girl, her fair young face as white as death, clung to her lover, crying out that he must save her. Alan, mad with shame and despair, sent for Lady Rosedene, who came with Col. Halle.

"You cannot allow such an injustice as this," he said; "it is too cruel! This young lady is under your care, Lady Rosedene. They shall trample my dead body under foot before they touch her!"

A voice rose from the crowd of women:

"She killed Lady Fraser because she was jealous of her."

When Alan Branston heard the words, they smote him like a sword. The arm that had gathered her closely to him fell by his side. She raised her despairing eyes to his face.

"Oh, my love, my love!" she cried; "surely, if all the world fails me, you will not?"

Lady Rosedene's words bore fatal witness against her young visitor.

"I never thought you meant it, Hyacinth," she said, "although I believe she drove you mad with jealousy."

"I may have been mad," replied the girl, calmly; "I do not remember what I said; but I take heaven to witness that I never injured Lady Fraser."

"If you are innocent," said Col. Halle, "you will be able to prove it at the right time and in the right place." He, for one, evidently believed in the girl's guilt.

The terrible scene was shortened by Col. Halle. Under some pretext he drew Alan away, and during his absence Hyacinth Vane was removed under the charge of the police officer.

The details of the terrible tragedy at Dene Hall were soon known all over the land. The newspapers discussed it fully; every illustrated paper had a view of Dene Hall; every variety of style was used in describing the tragedy—the pathetic, the sentimental, the monitory; but one and all of the writers agreed that it was the most awful crime of modern times. How greedily people read the story of the handsome young squire, who had so truly loved the young girl, although, man-like, he had thought it no treason to flirt with another woman. How they wondered about the young girl, who was said to have the face of a goddess. How they talked of the brilliant woman who had tried to lure the young lover away.

It was the old story, they said—love, jealousy and madness. No one seemed to doubt Hyacinth's guilt—she must have done the deed. So the public read and talked, while at Dene Hall the dreary tragedy moved on. There was an inquest, and the verdict was "willful murder." Then most of the visitors left Dene Hall. Col. Halle, at Lady Rosedene's request, remained.

The saddest part of the tragedy was to come. Alan Branston determined that Francis Vane should not hear the intelligence from any one but himself, and he went over to see him. He lived out of the world, this scholar who had been so true to one love; but the moment his eyes fell on the young squire's face he cried out:

"There is something wrong with my daughter!"

Alan tried to tell him gently, to break the news to him softly; but from the first moment in which he clearly understood, there was death in his face. He spoke at last, but his words were few.

"My daughter is in prison, you tell me, charged with the murder of the woman of whom you made her jealous?"

"Alas, it is so!" said Alan. "I would rather be dead myself than be telling this to you."

"And were I in your place I would rather be dead than saying it."

* * * * * * * *

The tragedy was deepened when people heard that Francis Vane, scholar and gentleman, was found dead on his wife's grave. There was a smile on his face when they raised him, as though he knew the truth.

CHAPTER XVI.

Hyacinth Vane's trial, while it lasted, occupied the attention of all England; there had not been so harsh sensation there had been no such sensation for years. There had been cases of poisoning and horrible murders, but nothing like this—a young and beautiful girl in her jealousy had slain the woman she believed to be her rival.

It was a trial that had been expected for many months; but the prisoner had been seriously ill, and it had been delayed until she was well enough to appear at the bar of justice.

The March Assizes at Ulverston were the general subject of conversation; every one was on the alert. The grand jury found a true bill, and Hyacinth Vane was to be tried for her life for the willful murder of Lady Fraser.

Hyacinth's father was dead, and, but for Alan, she would have been alone in the world. He would have lavished his whole wealth in her defense. He employed the cleverest and most eloquent counsel; he left no stone unturned; he wore himself to a shadow in his efforts—but circumstantial evidence was too strong for him.

The day of the trial came, and from all parts of England people went to see the heroine of the Dene Hall tragedy. There had been nothing like the excitement for years.

The evidence against the prisoner was strong. Ladies of unimpeachable veracity came forward and said that they had heard the prisoner threaten that she would slay the deceased if she took her lover from her; and those words, spoken by the girl in the mad frenzy of jealousy, meaning nothing then, had a very different and far more horrible sound when repeated in a court of justice. She had been heard to threaten Lady Fraser. A dozen witnesses could swear to the ill-feeling there was between the two. On the night of the murder they had quarreled; Hyacinth had been heard to say that she would kill her rival if she took her lover from her. It was next proved that after those few sharp words Hyacinth left the ball-room with the blue-and-white shawl round her shoulders; the same shawl was found clinched in the dead woman's hands, and fastened to it was one of the blue cornflowers Miss Vane had worn.

The evidence was strong; no one else had even a faint dislike to the hapless lady. The crime had never been committed for booty; her jewelry was lying about, but not even a ring had been touched. There was no possible motive to be assigned save jealousy; there was no one jealous but Hyacinth Vane. The evidence as to the shawl found in the murdered woman's hands proved that Hyacinth Vane must have been with her when she died; therefore she must have killed her.

So argued the prosecution; so thought the jury; and in defense what was there to be said? Most eloquent appeals were made by the clever counsel employed. They spoke of the prisoner's youth and beauty; they tried to show how impossible it was that a girl so young, so fragile, so weak, could have been guilty of so gross a crime. They made the most of one point—the absence of a weapon; but from the first it was evident that the trial was going against her. Perhaps her youth and beauty, instead of pleading for her, were against her. The jury had to steel themselves.

The evidence has told against her; one could read it in the faces of the jurymen, which grew graver and sadder—in the face of the judge, which was sorrowful with a great sorrow—in the weeping eyes of women and the bent brows of stern men.

The time came when the short sunshine of the March day was over, and a dull, yellow light filled the court—when the jury went out to consider their verdict, and the prisoner, white and cold as death, was led from the dock. The jury were absent for more than an hour, and when they returned it was to a scene no one ever forgot. Through the large windows could be seen the darkening sky, and the hoarse murmur of the crowd surrounding the court could be plainly heard. Tier after tier of eager faces was lifted, all eyes were bent in one direction. The gas had been lighted, and threw a curious livid hue on the hundreds of assembled faces. The one object of interest was Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident, of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in my back and sides, no appetite, gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately a friend advised trying Electric Bitters; and to my great joy and surprise the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cts., guaranteed, at W. A. Schreiter, Drug Store.

At a recent meeting of arboriculturists in France, the question was debated whether spiders should be suffered to spin their webs on fruit walls. The general opinion seemed to be that the webs were more useful than objectionable. It was remarked that they prevent the incursions of earwigs and similar insects, and also interfere with the operations of noxious flies whose larvas ravage leaves and fruits.

Death of Cockroaches.

One of the bulletins of the Department of Agriculture mentions a simple Australian remedy for cockroaches. It consists in feeding the insects upon a mixture of flour and plaster of Paris which, it is said, they greedily devour. The plaster of Paris "sets" after they have swallowed it, and that is the end of them.

Scientific Jottings.

The Empire State Sugar company, which is building a large sugar plant at Lyons, N. Y., has ordered ten auto-trucks of five tons capacity, which are to be used to cart sugar beets from the farms to the refinery. The company has 5,500 acres of land contracted for. Three electric omnibuses have also been ordered to run between Lyons and Sodus Point, on Lake Ontario, a summer resort, to compete with the steam railroad.

On the Jumna canal, at Delhi, monkeys swarm upon the banks and, being overcrowded and consequently unhealthy, they suffer considerable from various diseases. When one monkey is obviously ill a few of the larger monkeys watch for a favorable opportunity and then push it into the canal. If the poor creature be not drowned at once, it is thrown into the water again after it regains the trees, or else it is forced to keep aloof from the rest of the company.

Loss of human life by lightning in the United States during the year 1899 was greater than any preceding year for which statistics have been collected, says the Scientific American. The number of persons killed outright or who suffered injuries which resulted in their death was 562; the number of those who received injuries varying in severity from slight physical shocks to painful burns and temporary paralysis was 820. The greatest number of fatalities, about 45 per cent, were in the open. The next greatest number occurred in houses, about 34 per cent; 11 per cent occurred under trees and 9 per cent in barns. Fully a dozen persons were killed in the act of stripping clothes from a wire clothes line on coming near to one.

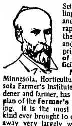
THE FARMER'S GARDEN.



Scientists make the startling assertion that lung and kidney ailments are rapidly increasing among the Farmers of America, and assign as one of the principle reasons the lack of vegetable food in sufficient variety.

Mr. A. K. BUSH, Dover, Minnesota, Horticulturist, with the Minnesota Farmer's Institute, also a successful gardener and farmer, has prepared an illustrated plan of the Farmer's Garden he is advocating. It is the most practical thing of the kind ever brought to our attention and does away very largely with hand labor. Mr. Bush's plan provides for a Fruit and Vegetable Garden that may be easily cared for with the aid of a horse and an ordinary farm cultivator. It is illustrated by a diagram and instructions are given as to culture, rotation, etc. Every farmer, in fact, every one who has or wants a garden, should have this folder, entitled The Farmer's Garden. It is published by Northrup-King & Co., the seedsmen of Minneapolis, Minnesota, and is sent FREE to those who write them, asking for it, and who will mention the fact that they saw the offer in this paper.

A Golden Dawn.

The night of the ball came, and great had been the preparations. A ball at Rosedene was one of the most pleasurable events in the country, and this was above all others eagerly looked for. Hyacinth, by her lover's desire, wore a dress of rich, white silk, superbly trimmed with blue cornflowers; a wreath of blue cornflowers lay on the golden hair, and she wore a knot of the flowers at her breast. An exquisite toilet it was, one just suited to her fair spring-like loveliness. She was so pleased with her lover's admiration that something of her former glad young happiness came back to her.

Alan was waiting for her in the hall, and kissed the sweet wistful face that was raised to his.

"How beautiful you look, my darling!" he said. "Now we will have a night so happy that it shall be like a summer dream to us. Let me see your dear face bright and glad as it is now."
